SPECTACULAR SEASCAPE filled with some of North America's most beautiful boats drew thousands of spectators this morning after cannon boomed a start for 50th annual Swiftsure sailing classic. Record field set out and, with wind and a little bit of luck, first boats should be arriving back Sunday afternoon. See Page 32 for Swiftsure eve musical celebration pictures.

13% mortgages?

By AL FORREST

The mortgage rate will fall again in Victoria next week, probably to 13 per cent or even 12.75 per cent, business spokesmen said today.

The rates were as high as 17.5 per cent in February.

"The rate should be down to 13 per cent by Tuesday," said W.A. Southwell, local manager of National Trust.

"It would only be logical after the drop in the prime rate announced on Thursday."

Banks announced their prime lending rate would fall to 13.75 from 14.75 effective Monday morning.

The prevailing mortgage rate across the city is 13.75 per cent for closed mortgages. Open mortgages, which can be paid off at any time without penalty, are as much as one point higher.

Southwell said financial houses are becoming a bit concerned about the precipitous fall in the rates.

"We would prefer an orderly downward movement. If it falls too quickly it might bounce up again. But right now this is good news, especially for those whose mortgages are coming up for renegotiation."

Greater Victoria Real Estate Board president Ray Rawnsley said many buyers are continuing to mark time, waiting to see how low the rates will go.

"More and more people are able to qualify for mortgages as the rates go lower but some are holding back."

Even so, the market has remained fairly brisk during May and prices are stable.

Once it is clear the bottom has been reached, home-buying activity would increase significantly.

Spokesmen for Victoria banks all said they expected the mortgage rate to go lower next week in tune with the decline in the prime rate.

The Bank of Canada rate fell dramatically by 1.5 points to 11.83 on Thursday, the lowest since July, 1979, and the full impact has not yet been relayed through the system.

The prime rate fell only one point, leaving room for a further decline next week.

Interest rates continue to fall in the U.S. where financial houses are predicting the inflation rate may cool off to nine per cent by year's end, down from their earlier predictions of as high as 17 per cent.

Canadian rates have been moving on a parallel level with those in the U.S.

The mortgage rate has ranged from 10 per cent to 17.5 per cent in Victoria during the past five years.

Yahoos spoil the party

City police had their hands full early today as Swiftsure revellers — described by police as local yahoos — milled about on the Causeway, shouting and throwing bottles on the road.

No one was injured in the outburst which lasted from midnight until about 4:30 a.m.

But the street was so littered with broken bottles police had to cordon off the block for several hours until a city works crew cleaned up the mess.

Five persons were taken into custody for being drunk in a public place and held in police cells until they sobered up.

A police spokesman said most of the problems were caused by locals.

The night was otherwise fairly quiet in the city except for a minor stabbing on a downtown street and vandalism to a car by two

No election in Quebec until fall

QUEBEC (UPC) — There will be no provincial election until this fall or early next spring but in the meantime the Parti Quebecois government will negotiate renewed federalism in good faith, says Premier Rene Levesque.

A premier's conference to discuss constitutional change, the subject of a quick trek to provincial capitals across the country by Justice Minister Jean Chretien, has been tentatively proposed by Prime Minister Trudeau for July.

Chretien, who began his whirlwind fact-finding mission Wednesday, was to return to Ottawa today after meeting Friday with premiers John Buchanan of Nova Scotia and Angus MacLean of Prince Edward Island.

He failed to arrange a meeting with Quebec Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Claude Morin to discuss a timetable for constitutional reform. The Quebec minister said he wanted more time to consider his province's position.

Levesque said Friday at his first news conference

Free 53, pay damages, world court orders Iran

Times News Services

THE HAGUE — The International Court of Justice today unanimously ordered Iran to release the American hostages and declared in a split decision that Iran must pay damages to the United States for the 203-day crisis.

Iran, which claims the World Court has no jurisdiction in the case, ignored an earlier ruling demanding the release of the 53 hostages and was expected to do the same now.

The court, the judicial arm of the United Nations, said the seizure of the hostages by Iranian militants and the endorsement of their action by the Iranian government demonstrate "successive and continuing breaches" by Iran of it obligations under international conventions and the treaty between Iran and the United States.

In a 12-3 vote, the 15-justice court said Iran is obligated to pay damages to the United States. But the justices left the amount to be set at later proceedings when the crisis ends and damages can be assessed.

Along with repeating its Dec. 15 order for release of the hostages, the court unanimously declared that no hostage may be tried or forced to be a witness in Iran. The militants holding the hostages and a number of deputies in the new Iranian parliament have demanded spy trials.

The court did not rule on a U.S. claim that Iran be ordered to bring to trial those responsible for the seisure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and it chided the United States for its aborted hostage rescue attempt last month.

Meanwhile, in Tehran, 23 people were executed today, including six leaders of the leftist, anti-clerical Forghan group.

Tel rate hike denied

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission rejected on Friday a B.C. Telephone Co. application to raise residential phone rates by 5.3 per cent and business rates 7.3 per cent.

(Other CRTC stories page 20)

Gordon MacFarlane, chairman and chief executive officer of the company, said reductions would now have to be made in 1980 operations.

Meanwhile, hearings are scheduled this fall for B.C. Tel's applications to increase subscriber rates by an additional 12.5 per cent in December.

In Victoria, Gary Lauk (NDP — Vancouver Centre), who strongly opposed the increase, said Friday he is pleased.

St. Helens puffs again

Times News Services

TOLEDO, Wash. — A sudden geyser of ash and steam five kilometres from the Mount St. Helens crater interrupted the air search for survivors of the volcano's devastating blast.

Two helicopter pilots who witnessed the 300- to 600-metre high geyser from the Spirit Lake Basin Friday called the incident unnerving.

The U.S. Geological Survey said the geyser, although new to the Spirit Lake area, was expected. They believe it was caused by water reaching heated ash deposits and exploding into steam upon contact.

The State of Washington estimated the volcano's devastation will cost state agencies $426.5 million. Timber flattened by the terrible force of the blast was declared a $200 million loss. Estimates of loss to agriculture in eastern Washington, much of it turned into one giant ash bowl, ranged as high as $200 million.

The state's figures did not include another estimated $200 million loss over the next several years in salmon and sports fish.

Meanwhile, it appears Chinook salmon are avoiding — much to the surprise of state biologists — the volcanic hazards of their native Cowlitz River and heading up the nearby Kalama River.

"It seems that these fish are a lot smarter than we gave them credit for," Tony Floor, state fisheries information officer, said Friday.

VAL D'OR, Que. — Two of eight men buried hundreds of feet down a gold mine for three days have been all but given up for dead and hope the other six would be found alive lessened today as arduous rescue operations continued.

"The chances of finding these men are one in a thousand," Belmoral Mine general manager Donald Lavigne said today, referring to Gilles Legare, 32, and Guy Daigle, 28, who were excavating ore near the 60-metre level when the cave-in occurred.

Lavigne said chances of finding the other six alive were only 50-50, since there were too many uncertainties to determine whether his plan would enable rescuers to reach the miners in time.

Rescuers had burrowed 200 feet down the main production ramp by late Friday and were poised with scoop trucks and drills to fan out through a complex of adjoining galleries 150 feet down.

"Once we've cleared the water out we will lower a diamond drill, shoot a two-inch hole and then we'll be able to pass food and medicine to them if they haven't moved," Lavigne said.

67% of trucks fail

VANCOUVER (CP) — A B.C. motor vehicle branch report says more than 67 per cent of tractor trailer trucks caught in surprise roadside inspections are too dangerous to be on the road or have major safety defects.

The report says major defects include such hazards as worn-out brake drums, tires worn and cut to the core and faulty steering.

A branch spokesman also said trucks hauling dangerous loads such as propane or chemicals appear to be as badly maintained as trucks hauling furniture or lumber.

The report said that of 3,619 trucks inspected, 193 were judged too dangerous to travel and were pulled off the road, while 2,252 had major safety defects.

G. W. Brown, chief safety inspector of the branch, said there was no relationship between the dangerous nature of some loads and the level of safety at which the trucks were maintained.

The roadblocks were operated secretly since December to avoid tipping off offending drivers.

Police said a man, who has not been identified, was walking in the 1400-block Broad shortly after 10 p.m. when he was stopped by a panhandler.

Moments later, he told police, he felt a blow in his upper left back. He did not see his attacker.

He made his own way to Victoria General Hospital where he was treated for a small stab wound and later released.

Police tracked down the panhandler but the victim was unable to identify him.

Officers will have to wait until Monday to complete their investigation into the vandalism incident.

Police said four youths were stopped at a traffic light at Johnson and Douglas at about 1 a.m. when they had a argument with two men in another car.

The precipitated a drag race which ended at Spring and Walnut where the two men jumped from their car and, using chains and a crowbar, smashed in the windows and a door of the youths' vehicle.

The men drove away but the youths, who escaped injury, recorded the licence number.

Police, however, couldn't trace the car owner because the car had only recently been re-registered and the licence number wasn't yet in the motor vehicle branch computer.

In other matters, Esquimalt police arrested a 16-year-old juvenile after a car chase that started on Admirals at 12:38 a.m. and ended in Banfield Park where the car took out 50 feet of wire fence and rammed a tree.

Extensive damage was done to the car but the juvenile escaped with only minor cuts and bruises.

He is to appear in Family Court charged with dangerous driving.

Saanich police said a 23-year-old man is lucky to be alive after a spectacular crash on Pat Bay Highway at the weigh scales opposite Elk Lake at 1:28 a.m.

A spokesman said two cars were travelling side-by-side north on the highway when a third car tried to overtake them by pulling into the weigh scales.

As the car came back onto the highway it went out of control and struck a lamp standard shearing the pole at its base.

The car rolled on its side for 50 feet and then flipped onto its roof and skidded another 180 feet before it hit another lamp standard.

The vehicle flipped back on its wheels and ending up in a ditch facing on-coming traffic.

100 feared dead

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — About 100 workers were feared killed today when a multi-storey building collapsed during construction at Mysore in southern India, the Press Trust of India news agency reported.

Aid bound for sinking tanker

CAPE FEAR, N.C. (UPI) — A 640-foot tanker carrying crude oil and 28 persons reported it was sinking 20 miles south of Cape Fear, the Coast Guard said today.

Lt. Thomas Johns of the Coast Guard Rescue Coordination Center in Portsmouth, Va., said aircraft and ships were dispatched to help the Esso Portland, a tanker of Liberian registry.

He said the tanker was carrying No. 5 and No. 6 oil, but he didn't know how much.

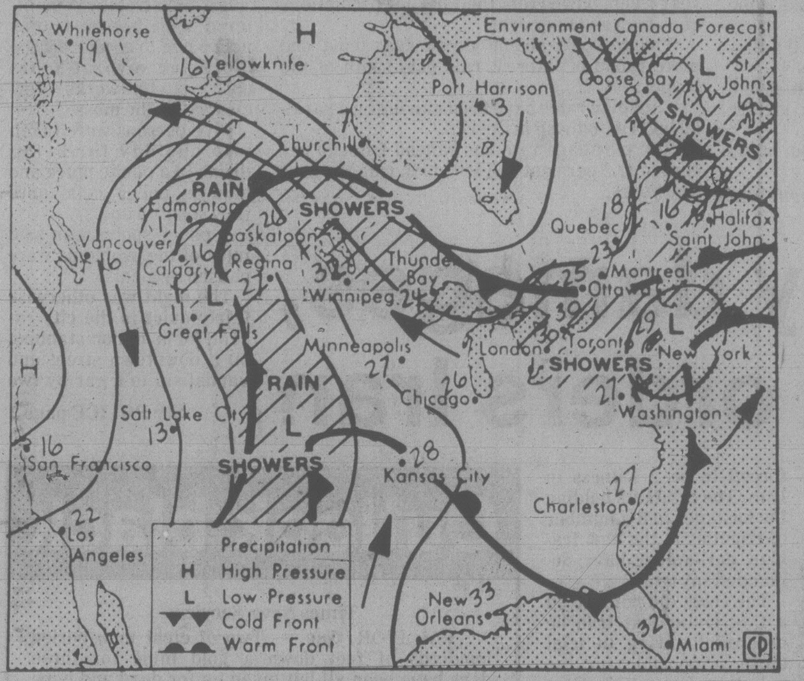

Map valid until noon Sunday

Clouds and rain were spilling over the mountains over eastern sections of the province due to a low pressure system over southern Saskatchewan. The clouds moved back into the south coast as well during the night while the north coast remained generally clear. A complex low pressure system over the northwestern U.S. will maintain cloudy conditions through Sunday in most regions.

Postal union bosses content

OTTAWA (UPC) — Negotiators for 23,000 inside postal workers will recommend acceptance of an agreement hammered out after marathon talks with Postmaster General Andre Ouellet, says Jean-Claude Parrot, president of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers.

The two sides signed an agreement late Friday afternoon, averting a nationwide postal strike, after three days of talks and haggling over "legal" wording of the contract.

Parrot refused to disclose details of the agreement, believed to follow closely recommendations of a conciliator's report made public last week.

"We would really like to be able to go to the membership first ... because it is the membership that is the most interested in knowing first what their negotiators succeeded to do. They are also the ones who decide to accept what we have achieved here," Parrot said.

The national executive will recommend the workers accept the agreement, Parrot said following the five-hour bargaining session Friday.

Rain subdues Alta. fires; Ontario still battles flames

The Canadian Press

Thousands of people were forced from their homes by forest fires in Northern Ontario and Manitoba on Friday while in other parts of Canada, rain and humid weather were expected to keep the flames under control.

About 500 fires were burning from British Columbia to Quebec.

In Northern Ontario, more than 3,300 residents of the Red Lake area were flown to Winnipeg. Officials of the natural resources ministry said that a change in wind direction would wipe out the gold-mining community 400 kilometres northwest of Thunder Bay.

Most of the 650 residents of Fort Hope, an Indian community 350 kilometres north of Thunder Bay, were evacuated. Firefighters were there on Friday, but said they would probably be forced to go today and leave the community to the flames.

About 80 fires were burning in Ontario.

In Manitoba, where 100 fires were burning, shifting winds allowed firefighters to bulldoze a firebreak near the northern community of Snow Lake on Friday night. More than half the population of 2,000 had left the town, 700 kilometres north of Winnipeg, but were given the go-ahead to return today.

The Lethbridge weather office recorded just over 90 millimetres of rain in the 24 hours ending midnight Friday, a single-day record rainfall and a record for the month of May.

This was expected to ease the pressure of at least 61 fires burning Friday in Alberta, destroying more than 1.3 million acres (520,000 hectares). The Peace River area was the hardest hit, but the area got its first measurable rainfall on Friday since the start of the 1980 forest fire season and, for the first time in weeks, no new fires were reported.

Jim Haley, duty officer for the B.C. forest service, said rain in B.C.'s Peace River area gave firefighters a breather and a chance to make progress on the 146 fires still burning.

About 70 fires were burning in Saskatchewan, where crews said they could not remember such severe conditions this early in the year.

4th escaper caught in Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — The fourth of five prisoners who escaped from the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional centre Monday was arrested Friday during a routine car check in the downtown area.

U.S. Northwest buried in snow

By United Press Internationall

A Memorial Day weekend snowstorm swept the northwest U.S. today and an unrelenting heat wave baked the drought-parched Plains, where cattle ranchers face ruin unless rain falls in the next few days.

A spring storm brewing in the Pacific Northwest spread snow through the mountains of Nevada, Oregon and Montana and heavy snows were forecast for some higher elevations of the Rockies.

Spring and winter were at war in Montana — with snow swirling through the mountains while hot weather gripped the Plains.

A heatwave that has farmers in the northern Plains on the ropes showed no signs of relenting.

The mercury climbed to 33 Friday at Williston, N.D. and 32 at Miles City, Mont. The temperature hit 28 Friday at Duluth, Minn., tying a record set in 1883.

The Dakotas are in the throes of a drought and heat wave that threaten to wipe out farmers already reeling under high inflation.

Scuttled dream a sad event

VANCOUVER (CP) — Some were angry, while others accepted their plight philosophically, but all the tourists who showed up Friday for their dream cruise to nowhere shared some feeling of disappointment.

CP Rail had managed to contact about 250 prospective passengers earlier this week to tell them the Princess Patricia was strikebound and their cruise to Alaska was cancelled.

For the 30-odd travellers who already were en route to Vancouver, however, the news didn't come until they prepared to board the ship for a relaxing week plying West Coast waters.

Instead, they were offered their money back, free food, free drinks and a berth for the night in Vancouver Harbor.

"I'm 75 and my health is not good," said Texan Edith Goe. "I may never get the chance again. So I am bitterly disappointed about not seeing Alaska."

Interviewed Friday evening on board the Princess, which is tied up in a strike by licensed officers over manning and salaries, a few said they still intend to take the cruise some day.

They had come from various points in the U.S. and from as far away as Australia. Some made new plans to carry on their vacations in B.C. Some were returning home.

John B. and Rose Eulas, a retired couple from Daytona, Florida, were in good spirits. Unfazed by the cancellation, they're heading out in their camper through the B.C. Interior to the Rockies before making their way back home.

This was to have been the trip in which they completed visits to all 50 states, said Mr. Eulas, and they'll go home with his wife missing number 50, Alaska. But they plan to try again next year, provided CP Rail's labor contracts are not in dispute, said Mr. Eulas, who's taken the cruise before.

"Why spoil a vacation?" Mr. Eulas smiled. "You change what you can, and what you can't change, you accept."

There were 15 Australians booked on the aborted cruise, including a 93-year-old, said Ron Harrington, a farm produce agent from Sydney.

Harrington, 48, and his wife, Hedda, 46, had travelled 21 hours, then walked into the CP Rail office only to be told of the cancellation.

Mr. Harrington doubts they will try again: "It's a long way for a once-in-a-lifetime holiday, isn't it?"

"I must say CP Rail, in my opinion, did everything possible," Mr. Harrington said. "We can't knock what they've done to try to get us out of the trouble we're in."

Company spokesman Don Bower said that in addition to refunding ticket prices and attempting to make alternate arrangements for the tourists, the company also had to reimburse travel agents for the commissions they lost.

CP Rail's 75 striking officers are seeking a higher salary increase and retention of the present 24-hour shifts. The masters, who earn $2,400 a month, have been offered $2,628 but want $2,808.

SFU prof acquitted of insult to church

VANCOUVER (CP) — Three judges in Greece have acquitted a Simon Fraser University professor charged with having "maliciously insulted the Greek Orthodox Church with vulgar and sarcastic expressions."

Education professor Dr. Tasos Kazepides had written an essay that dealt with the separation of the church and state, which resulted in a charge that could have brought him two years in jail.

"This has to be one of the most important events in modern Greek history," Kazepides said in a telephone interview from Greece after his victory. "Hundreds came to my trial and when the verdict was announced, it was one of the most exciting moments in my life.

"Our witnesses were the best academics in Greece and it was more a seminar than a trial. One of the witnesses for the prosecution tried to apologize to me. He said he really didn't want to come and he had been drafted into the case. At the end of the hearing, he apologized."

The Greek-born professor, 49, a faculty member of SFU since 1968, has been invited to speak in Athens, Salonika, Crete, and his home town of Veroia.

In Burnaby, his wife was relieved with the not guilty verdict.

"The Greeks aren't nearly as intolerant as the trial made them out to be," Joy Kazepides said.

"He was forced to trial because a small minority of theologians managed to get their way. The trial wasn't indicative of the attitudes of most Greek people. When the verdict was announced, everybody applauded."

Some police training criticized

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police recruits are taught virtually nothing about crime prevention, a veteran police officer told the annual police educator's conference.

"Police training in this area is just terrible," said Robert Galbraith, special consultant to the B.C. attorney-general's department.

Galbraith, who retired last year as inspector in charge of the Coquitlam RCMP detachment after 24 years of police work, was one of three panelists who agreed that police officers need specialized training in crime prevention.

Galbraith and two senior police officers told about 100 delegatesthat enforcement alone cannot solve the country's crime problems.

Galbraith said that crime control is the mutual objective of investigative and preventive police procedures, but noted that the investigative process leading to punishing the criminal has limited impact because courts are leaning toward less severe punishment, especially for minor offences.

As a result, preventive policing should be getting more emphasis.

He said officers should be trained to take steps early to help prevent juveniles from becoming hard-core criminals, and also should be looking at problems within family units as a method of crime prevention.

Wage rise too little, late

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 65-cent increase in the minimum hourly wage is "too little, too late," Jim Kinnaird, B.C. Federation of Labor president, said Friday.

Since the last hike in the minimum wage four years ago, "inflation has been consistently at nine per cent or above." Kinnaird said.

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Two Juneau residents were arrested Friday morning as they stepped off an Alaska State Ferry here.

Acting on a request by Alaska state troopers, RCMP arrested Mike Markos, 30, and Kim Quintana, 19.

RCMP also seized almost $10,000 in cash.

The two were sought following theft of money Thursday from Markos's employer in Juneau.

Dispute resolved

KELOWNA (CP) — Kelowna General Hospital was a "guinea pig" in a dispute that saw a $200,000 computerized tomography scanner sit idle for much of the last two months Colin Elliott, hospital executive director, said.

But the dispute has been resolved and the hospital's five radiologists now are performing CT (brain) scans upon request rather than in emergencies only as was the practice for nearly two months.

The radiologists, whose one-year contract expired March 31, sought a continuation of fee-for-service payments while the government was pushing for payments on a salary or hourly basis, Elliott said.

Murder charge

VANCOUVER (CP) — James Hugh Ford, 29, of Vancouver was charged Friday with second-degree murder in the stabbing death of a West End hotel clerk.

District split urged

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Fraser Fort-George Regional District should be decentralized and made into two northern regional districts a university planning professor said.

Irving Fox of the University of B.C. told the annual Planning Institute of B.C. conference there should be elected regional officials within the two areas to give local people a greater voice.

Trouble with public pensions

Fiddling with employee pensions is no way for the employer to endear himself to his staff, as the provincial government is finding out.

In an era when there is no end in sight to the inflation that is sapping the purchasing power of people on fixed incomes, one word in the fine print of pension plans becomes exceedingly important. The word is indexing.

Tampering with the indexing clause of the public service employee's pension plan evokes an emotional response from people worried about their retirement security. For that reason it is likely that the mass rallies planned by the B.C. public sector unions to protest the government's plan to limit indexing will be well attended and loud.

But how should the government and taxpayers of B.C. respond? While it may be easy to sympathize with people who feel their retirement income is jeopardized, it is also difficult for taxpayers, most of whom are not employed by the government, many of whom are not covered by such a generous pension plan and all of whom contribute to civil servants pension fund, to rationalize going into future debt because the plan is not self-liquidating.

Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe says the pension plan is $1 billion short of meeting its long term commitments.

The possibility is real that the pension plan will collapse as a smaller workforce supports an increased number of retired workers (it is estimated that by 2030, for every three workers there will be one senior citizen) and inflation sucks the plan dry. Wolfe's solution was to propose legislation to alter indexing. Increases in payouts would be based on the plan's financial capacity rather than the consumer price index.

Wolfe might have avoided confrontation with the public sector unions had they participated in the proposed changes. His methods leave something to be desired, but the provincial secretary is doing the majority of B.C. taxpayers a favor.

He is, in effect, trying to put the onus for the plan's viability where it belongs — on the people who will benefit from it. If public sector employees want pensions indexed to inflation, then contributions must be increased. Ignoring the unfunded liability would eventually mean that people not benefitting from the plan (the taxpayers) would end up bailing it out.

Union leaders agree that the unfunded liability exists but they also point out that the pension plan is in better financial shape than most public pension plans, in particular the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. While that's true, it simply points out the perils ahead for B.C.

Pension plans in the private sector are generally required by law to be fully funded, meaning that there is enough in the bank to cover all future benefits credited to plan members. Most public pension plans operate on a pay-as-you-go basis, which is fine as long as long as each successive generation of workers is larger. However, the ratio of retired people to workers is growing, and that can only spell trouble for everyone in the long run.

Day four of the ash crisis

PLUMMER, Idaho — From a signboard above the moon scape that once was the gravelled parking lot of the Country Inn on U.S. 95, a question greeted the few travelers: "Isn't this a pain in the ash?"

Everywhere in the Northern Idaho panhandle, innumerable versions of such "ash jokes" could be seen and heard Wednesday — which was, as the Moscow Idahonian put it, "Day Four of the Ash Crisis."

No one, of course, is really amused by the strange disaster that has struck Idaho and huge regions of Washington and Montana since Mount St. Helens erupted last Sunday morning and sent a cloud of volcanic ash boiling more than 12 miles into the sky.

Day into night

Not long after noon that cloud, moving swiftly east and northeast on the prevailing winds, briefly turned day into night over Plummer, Moscow, Coeur D'Alene and other Idaho panhandle communities, nearly 300 miles from the volcano.

Then the ash began to fall, settling as silently and thickly as snow in winter. On the southern edge of the ash cloud's path, Lewiston on the Clearwater River received only a light sprinkling. Seventy five miles north, Plummer was inundated with a fall of two to three inches in depth — with drifts up to six inches.

Ash coated the greening trees of spring with white. It piled up and slid from rooftops. It collected on the sidewalks and in the gutters of city streets. It clogged the air filters and carburetors and ruined the oil in combustion engines. It drifted on the highways, so that moving cars raised thick clouds that reduced visibility to zero. What it did — or may do — to livestock, wild life, spring plantings, fish in the streams and human lungs remains to be seen. The ash — a fine white powder with the texture of talcum and a cooling touch on the fingers — is mostly silicon, with tracings of other minerals.

Air samples collected at Coeur D'Alene on Monday contained 15,000 particulates per cubic meter. Even on Day Four, the air in the "ash belt" was hazy with the stuff, looking at times as if a fine snow were falling. Cleanup efforts, automobiles and tramping feet constantly stirred up drifts from the ground, covering everything with dust.

Exposure over a period of years could mean lung diseases like silicosis. No one is sure what one massive exposure might portend but doctors and health authorities in the worst-hit areas are recommending that people wear masks, stay indoors and drive as little as possible. Most schools have been closed. Even the ubiquitous joggers have been advised to give up their sport until the ash goes away or can be cleaned up.

How long that will be no one is sure. Eventually the ash will be absorbed in the earth — perhaps increasing the fertility of this region, which already produces wheat, lentils and dry peas in profusion. Much will run off into rivers and streams. But it won't melt away like snow or dissolve in water. Sprinkling helps hold down the dust and hoses can clear it off a street, but only to pile it up in mud banks somewhere else or work it into overtaxed storm sewers.

North of Moscow, highway driving was feasible but hazardous on Day Four, since the ash becomes literally impenetrable by human vision when it clouds. Air filters and oil have to be changed every 100 miles. Municipal police, clean-up and emergency vehicles, owing to cost of use in such conditions, have suffered heavy losses.

Specialists aren't sure what the affects on plant and wildlife may be, but insects — ants, flies, grasshoppers — are believed to have been hard hit. That in turn could make life difficult for insect-eating birds. Honeybees, with bodies made to collect fine powdery pollens, may be badly affected. The sun's effect on dust-coated plants may be retarded, too.

Mask of humor

Rain would help, the more the better; but a big wind would undo much of the clean-up so far completed. The Idaho National Guard has been called out to provide bodies and machines for the clean up. The newspapers are advising people how to avoid psychological depression, once confinement, dust, the loss of time and money, the frustrating clean-up efforts, have taken their toll, and all the ash jokes begin to sound like what they are — one more instance of humankind's immemorial need to mask its vulnerability in humor and bravado.

Mourning question period

OTTAWA — It is 11:06 Friday morning when the people elected to govern Canada through Parliament open Question Period with Stan Darling, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, rising "on a matter of extreme urgency."

The extreme urgency, it seems, is the fate of the Rockwell International plant in Bracebridge which makes wheel discs and is having trouble and the Hon. Member wants equivalent aid to the $200 million the government has given Chrysler.

Next, Mel Gass, the Hon. Member for Malpeque, is upset because the green fees for junior golfers at the Green Gables golf course in Prince Edward Island have gone up 530 percent.

Ottawa's volcano

It began Friday morning, the Commons benches are sparsely specked with representatives of democracy, the scene looked as if the Mount St. Helens volcano had just erupted.

The Hon. Member for Regina West, Les Benjamin, rises on another matter of "urgent and pressing necessity" under standing order 43, it being that the CPR is paying only 11.75 percent interest on the $31 million it owes the CNR.

"I see he's still buying his ties at a wallpaper store," muses a press gallery regular.

The urgent and pressing matter of the Hon. Member for Bow River, Gordon Taylor, encompasses the Magna Carta on the way to a defense of gun laws. "That looks like an after-dinner mints theme tie," says the press gallery regular.

All six of the most important Tory seats are empty, the gap stretching from Tory frontbencher Harvie Andre to Ray Hnatyshyn resembles a gulch outside Medicine Hat.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe South, Ron Stewart, has an urgent motion, noting that since the Peter Jackson cigarette firm's golf tournement, also known as the Canadian Open, awards Inuit sculptures as prizes then the National Gallery should be pursuing the same goals as the cigarette company.

Mr. Arnold Malone, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot, is upset because the Commons rule book is full of "him" and not "her" and should be replaced "by articles of neutral gender."

It is 11:16 before the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre asks the first question of the Prime Minister. Mr. Trudeau shyly declines to answer and the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North, Roy MacLaren, obfuscates for him on oil pricing.

When Harvie Andre persists in supplemental questions, Mr. MacLaren, wearing a suit he borrowed from Fred Astaire and the prose borrowed from Paul Martin, talks in artful circles as parliamentary secretary to the absent minister of energy, Marc Lalonde.

Francis Fox wiggles his fingers across the floor at Ray Hnatyshyn who looks surprised, confused and then obeys the signals and comes to sit beside Fox.

Mr. Trudeau continues to refuse to talk, with the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North, the Designated Orator, answering all his questions.

Ed Broadbent: "I had not realized, Madam Speaker, that we have a new prime minister in the House."

An Hon. Member: "Any change is for the better."

The Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville, Tom Cossitt, is after Solicitor-General Robert Kaplan for permitting certain persons "to cavort around with Soviet agents." Mr. Kaplan, in his wine velvet jacket: "Anyone can cavort with anyone they want."

Time limit

A television reporter: "Question Period on Friday mornings should be five minutes long." Pencil reporter "Wrong. Three minutes."

The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey, G.M. Gurbin, is after Immigration Minister Lloyd Axworthy because there is "an acute shortage of chicken-sexers in Canada and as chicken sex-training is not done in Canada, is the minister prepared to give some relief to the hatcheries — and to the chickens?"

A TV reporter: "Is this really how I want to earn my living?"

It is now 12:00 and Question Period is over. Mr. Trudeau has not opened his mouth. He waves excitedly to someone in the far gallery. It's the most animation he's shown all day.

Municipal madness

No one who has observed politics in B.C. for more than three hours would expect to find in any political forum here a scene of calm and rational debate about important issues of the day.

Still, it seems a pity that a number of our more important municipal political bodies have in recent weeks descended to the levels of rhetoric and insult normally reserved for the stone castle on Belleville Street, affectionately known by its observers as "The Zoo."

The Zoo, by the way, for anyone who has forgotten its existence, keeps grumbling along with occasional eruptions into righteous indignation from one side or the other. It has almost disappeared from the province's news columns because, aside from the introduction of a very good consumer protection bill, nary a thing of importance or excitement has been said down there for weeks. The name-calling, snarled one-liners, and even corridor arguments have become almost dully commonplace.

At the local level, on the other hand, a large number of elected officials appear to have personally designated May as Confrontation Month and to be seeing who can best exemplify the title.

The three bodies particularly affected are (in order of dreadfulness) the Capital Regional Board, Saanich council, and Victoria council.

The CRD board has been running downhill ever since it started the takeover of urban transit. The whispered decision of rural directors to leave the board without a quorum if it wanted to pay transit costs through a gasoline tax, set up divisions that have not yet been healed. Worsening affairs is the extreme personal animosity between regional board chairman Jim Campbell and Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier.

The ongoing lawsuit over the Tillicum shopping centre development seems as much a personal power struggle between the two men as it is an honest attempt to sort out a thorny situation. Both issue statements complaining about the other's behavior in the case; both argue about whose legal tactics are delaying the issue the most. They can't even agree on who won the preliminary legal arguments before the judge.

The only people benefitting from this struggle are a number of lawyers who doubtless will receive thousands of dollars in fees from the various public purses involved.

Couvelier is also the key figure in the Saanich debates. He seems to be having a great deal of trouble keeping his temper. He was reported at one Saanich meeting this week to have called one of his aldermen "a sick man," making it quite clear he was referring to mental health, not to any cold or sunburn the poor fellow might have picked up. At another meeting he engaged in a shouting match with an alderman.

In Victoria, Mayor Bill Tindall remains the best example around of calmness, tact and diplomacy, but a number of his aldermen could well follow his lead. Ald. Ron McKenzie is the worst offender these days, having decided, it appears, that every speech he makes should be an attack on the "credibility" of his fellow-aldermen who belong to the NDP.

The results of this emphasis on personal invective and partisan gamesmanship is more severe in local politics than at the provincial level.

First, in the legislature a relatively impartial Speaker maintains order, allowing the premier to be as partisan as he pleases. At the local level, however, the mayor or chairman must maintain order at meetings as well as expressing his own opinion. When he is unable to control himself (let alone the rest of his board or council) or when he is so clearly biased against one side, it is impossible for the meeting not to degenerate into the verbal equivalent of a street-fight.

Also, in the legislature, the opposition members have no administrative responsibilities and are not the political link with any managers or civil servants. Each ministry has a government member (cabinet minister) to fight for it in the House.

On a local council, however, most aldermen, even those who usually form the minority on controversial issues, have responsibility for a committee and department. They have what might be called executive responsibility while still being in the role of opposition in the legislative process.

If polarization becomes too imbedded, this can be most difficult for the departments that happen to be represented by "opposition" aldermen. If the majority cannot bring itself to vote for anything proposed by some of the "opposition," a whole department can suffer.

No one expects politics to be carried on without some passion, some emotion, some controversy. It is surely not too much to expect, however, that the emotion can be tempered with a dose of self-control, reason and perspective.

Shadow marriages

BOSTON — It was the first time I had ever seen a man snip his nose hairs on prime-time television. But it may not be the last. NBC's recent entry into the world, United States, was nothing if not relentlessly realistic in its description of the daily-ness of married life.

But the program that premiered this spring was also realistic in another way. Here, for the first time, was a show about the new marriage — the marriage lived in the shadow of divorce.

Libby and Richard Chapin were not Ozzie and Harriet, or Archie and Edith. In fact, this couple whose dialogue was as decorator-chic as their living room, reminded me more of Liv Ullmann and Erland Josephson.

The scenes from their marriage were infused with the anxieties and intimacies of staying together in what Libby calls "the splitting season." The scenes were played against a backdrop of love and fragility.

The Chapins have come a long way from the Nelsons.

In the early television days, when divorce was an accident and family problems a secret, couples on the tube were all permanently and perfectly mated. Dad might be a boob from time to time, and mom might require a stroking or two, but marriage was a happily-ever-after, marred by only the mildest misunderstandings.

Television contracts may have been short-lived, but the marriage vows never came up for renewal.

But sometime during the 1960s, divorce became the trendy, emotional Club Med. Singleness was where the action was and only a dreary slug would pass up a second chance for such a Creative Experience.

Divorce became the Outward Bound of mid-life, Living Alone became the challenge. Splitting became the rite of passage that proved whether or not you had the right stuff. It was all, gawd help us, a growth experience.

It seemed that the very idea of creating a credible marriage eluded Hollywood, so the sitcom stars turned single. There was Alice, managing remarkably well on her minimum wage (did you ever get a look at that apartment?) and Ann Romano coping one day at a time without Mr. Romano. Even Larry said goodbye.

Most of the working marriages on the air took place during the Depression, on the prairie or in Bunkerville. But United States may have heralded Stage Three.

This was the first evidence that the seismic shocks of the divorce statistics have hit the 16-inch world of serials. When the Chapins fought, it was not assumed that they would make up and go to the seashore. When they heard about yet-another-separation, they turned to each other and said, as Dick did, "How do you figure it? I thought they were happy." And they didn't feel smug, just threatened.

The Chapins live in our era, when the ground is loose under permanence, and security seems very shaky. Theirs are not the only children who wonder at every flare-up: Does this mean divorce?

Yet, in a peculiar way, this very anxiety has made marriage dramatic again. The taken-for-granted-marriage idea has been replaced by the marriage of high risks and high energy.

So far, United States is the most extreme example of life under the ax of divorce and covers of separation. But it is indicative of yet another change in attitudes.

In private lives, staying together has become news. Marriage — this complicated, constantly questioned state — has become a kind of challenge. And living together legally is a test of survival.

The Chapins held back nothing. They talked and talked and talked about sex, money, the fear of missing something, the fear of being known — the melting pot of anxieties in marriages lived as an alternative.

"You don't think there is a man alive that doesn't secretly wish he could be as untied as he once was?" said Richard.

"Yes, I can imagine wanting to be free of that one person who knows you so well," Libby answered. "How marvellous it would be to start all over with someone else. A perfect stranger with whom he can be an absolutely perfect stranger."

They might not last, this couple. They were excessively verbal, too honest, too wounded and wounding, too open about all of their fears which are all of our fears. They might not be able to carry on week after week.

But that, after all, is the point.

By WILLIAM JOHNSON
The Globe and Mail

QUEBEC — It's the end of the beginning. Nothing was settled Tuesday except the preliminaries to the next round.

The people of Quebec voted down, it is true, the request of their provincial government for a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association. Despite an ambiguous question and a trick campaign, they chose to remain with Canada.

But no one can believe that Tuesday's vote was decisive. Those who voted yes are not likely today to think no. A large part of Quebec's population is so unhappy with Canada that it took a chance, voted for what could eventually mean the destruction of Canada.

The majority voted no. But that majority was not stating that all is well with Canada. Both Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and the head of the No Committee, Claude Ryan, made solemn promises that Canada would change. Trudeau travelled to Montreal during the campaign to say that all 74 Quebec Liberal members of parliament staked their "heads" on convincing English-speaking Canada that the constitution must be revised.

Tuesday's vote ends what could be called a phoney war period. The Parti Quebecois came to power with a commitment to hold a referendum on sovereignty. It half kept its promise by holding a referendum on a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association. It knew it could not at this time win a referendum on the real thing. So, much of the recent campaign was artificial, euphemistic, even surrealistic.

But the dissatisfaction of French-Canadian Quebecers was real, is there still, and must find a solution. Many Quebecers were radicalized in the course of the referendum campaign. Some went into the campaign federalists, and by Tuesday had become convinced sovereigntists. A solution acceptable to Quebecers will be harder and harder to find as the number of those who want out of Canada increases.

Pierre Trudeau will now try to come to terms with Rene Levesque for the revision of the constitution. No substantial headway can possibly be made. Trudeau will never be able to propose a package of measures which can win Levesque's approval. Even if common ground could be found, neither will trust the good faith of the other in negotiations. Each will consider the other an enemy with only hostile political intentions.

So, until either Trudeau or Levesque is replaced, the stalemate over Quebec's place in confederation will continue. The earliest hope for a breakthrough is the election of Ryan as premier at the next provincial election, sometime between now and the fall of 1981.

Claude Ryan has staked his political future on the proposals for change in his beige paper. When they were published in January much of the reaction in English-speaking Canada was negative, decrying the proposals as too radical. In Quebec, though, the reaction was exactly the opposite. Ryan came under considerable criticism because his scheme for revising the constitution was too Canada-centred, not Quebec-centred enough.

Somehow, sooner or later, English-speaking Canada is going to have to come to terms with the beige paper or something like it. If common ground cannot be found between Ryan and the other provincial premiers, it is hard to see how Quebec can find conferation acceptable. If Ryan's voice is rejected, to whom will the rest of Canada speak?

But first the two great federalist leaders from Quebec will have to find a common resolution. Their proposals in the past differed substantially. There is a wide gap between Trudeau's A Time for Action and Ryan's beige paper. As long as Trudeau and Ryan cannot reach agreement on the constitutional shape of Canada, there is no hope of revising federalism.

The timetable for bringing in a new constitution is now quite tight. It must be done while Trudeau is still prime minister. He enjoys unique prestige in Quebec. He alone, working with a federalist Quebec premier, could persuade Quebecers to accept a plan for constitutional change. Though a substantial share of Quebec's population will disagree with any possible proposal, the closest that Quebec can come to a federalist consensus will be on the basis of a common plan sponsored by Prime Minister Trudeau and Quebec's premier. Anything else will be rejected.

Constitutional change is essential, but not sufficient to ensure the future. That will also require a change in Canada such that French becomes the second language of the country's leaders.

China flexes power

By LINDA MATHEWS

PEKING — China's successful tests of long-range missiles in the South Pacific this week offered the world both an impressive display of its prowess in rocketry and an unexpected show of its naval strength as well.

Military analysts here say that the two multi-stage intercontinental ballistic missiles that were fired more than 6,000 miles leave no doubt that the Chinese are capable of delivering nuclear warheads anywhere in the Soviet Union and on targets along the West Coast of North America.

"The message should be clear to both China's friends and its foes," a Western diplomat said. "The Chinese have rockets that work, which ought to be a significant deterrent to any future Soviet attack."

To monitor the flights, 18 Chinese ships were dispatched to the splashdown site, a circle with a radius of 70 nautical miles within an area bounded by the Solomon Islands, Nauru, Kiribati (formerly the Gilbert Islands), Tuvalu, Fiji, Western Samoa and the New Hebrides.

Never before had the Communist Chinese navy been deployed so far from its home bases. The presence of the Chinese fleet — including a guided missile destroyer, a supply tanker and a submarine rescue ship — dispelled any notion that the navy is incapable of operating on the high seas and forced Western military experts here to upgrade their assessment of the fleet's manoeuvrability.

Until now, the Chinese navy had stayed close to shore, never venturing any farther than the Taiwan Strait, where it stages manoeuvres every summer as a display of force against the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan.

The Nationalist government of President Chiang Ching-kuo has never worried particularly about the manoeuvres, for the Pentagon has repeatedly assured Taiwan that the Communists lacked the experience at sea required for an amphibious assault on the island or even an effective naval blockade. But if the Communists continue to venture out to sea, that assessment will have to be reviewed, according to the military analysts.

"On paper, the Chinese navy still looks weak, at least 20 years behind the Russians and the Americans," a European military officer said. "But this proves they're capable of pulling off a coordinated mission — more than we used to give them credit for."

The Chinese authorities used this week's tests to bolster their international prestige and restore the somewhat faltering pride of the Chinese people in their current government. Within hours of the first launching Sunday, the official People's Daily distributed a rare extra edition, printed in red ink, that announced the mission and displayed a map of the target area.

"These tests mark a new peak for our country's technology," said a congratulatory telegram sent by the Communist Party's Central Committee to the missile program's participants.

Letters to the editor

Mischievous ploy

Responsible government men, when interviewed, are expected to give explicit and honest answers: Premier Bennett with a devious "if". . . and "B.C. will go it alone. . ." threw a question of doubt upon the recent talks with Prime Minister Trudeau about the B.C. coal negotiations; it was a mischievous ploy, and elicited a prompt and honest statement of fact from the Prime Minister of Canada.

Who was Premier Bennett aiming to please? Peter Lougheed? Certainly not a listening public! — Kathleen M. Worthington-Lake, 990 Hampshire Road.

Bravo, Saanich

As newcomers steeped in the performing arts we have been watching the articles and letters on the Globe Theatre with great interest.

Audrey Johnson's "Opinion" (May 17) said it all. The concept is brilliant, idealistic but hopefully would not rob the private and public purses of existing performing arts organizations who are struggling to stay afloat.

The idea of a two-level project of theatre first and village second appeals — or the other way around if the village is to support the theatre. Rome wasn't built in a day!

Stratford and Shaw Festivals each have other available stages and Shakespeare or Shaw is not their only repertoire. We're sure Barry Morse and Brian Lightburn realize only the star system will draw tourists from afar. An orchestra pit is a must if other organizations are to use the premises in off-season. This can be hidden and not mar the original Globe concept. If The Village is leased before construction, those leases could be used as collateral to aid the project. Canada Council, provincial and civic grants for programming should be committed ahead for security.

If all this can't be done, remember Stratford started in a tent and Shaw Festival in a courthouse. The Guelph Spring Festival used churches and existing auditoriums around town in the beginning years.

Bravos to Saanich and the Morse-Lightburn team for their concept, but remember Shakespeare's words "Discretion is the better part of valor" and may the Globe not arise from the dust of the existing arts organizations.

A last thought: would a Gilbert and Sullivan Festival, as well, fill in when the Shakespeare Theatre is dark? — Barbara and Carl Little, 825 Fort Street.

Make it a park

The plans for building on public property in Victoria harbor (the Reid, Songhees and Rainbow sites) may, with a little bit of luck, include 20-foot public walkways along the waterfront. Those paths will help to remind the public of the open spaces they have lost, of the waterfront park areas that could have been, had the hotels, residences and convention centre been built elsewhere.

Taxpayers will foot the bill for the entire cost of the convention centre:

Cost of construction, current prices (escalated considerably over the past year), $8 million.

Provision of underground parking lot, $1.7 million.

Start-up costs before the centre opens (to be shared equally between the province and Victoria), Victoria's share $190,000.

Operating deficits: estimate for Victoria's share over the next seven years, $1 million.

Three years ago former Mayor Mike Young said, "The city has no wish to build a convention centre . . . . This is something private enterprise must do . . . ." One wonders what has happened since to bring about the turn around.

Victoria has pressing needs that deserve priority — a first class sewage disposal system is one. An improved public transportation system is another. Those projects would provide jobs and circulate money throughout the business sector.

A model of the proposed harbor development displays an overview from which it is clear that the continuity of the pleasant open space areas in front of the Parliament Buildings and along the causeway will come to an untimely halt when the convention centre, along with other buildings there, congest Wharf Street. The convention centre will rise 30 feet above street level and block the view of the waterfront from the street, other than the glimpses visible between the buildings. The attractive facade of the old buildings on Wharf Street, which sets a tone of Victoria as vessels approach the harbor, will be blocked from view. Instead, passengers will see a modern style convention centre building, an approach that will no longer be unusual but one which can be and is duplicated in other cities.

Victoria's population is one of the fastest growing and Beacon Hill Park is described as "overused". More parks are needed to provide pleasant recreational areas for our present citizens and future generations. This is probably a once in a lifetime opportunity to create a downtown waterfront park.

Once built on, public waterfront sites are lost virtually forever for public park use. — B. E. Gibbens, 933 Convent Place.

Fabulous nurses

May we take up a small amount of space in your newspaper to publicly express our thanks to the fabulous group of nurses at the Victoria General Hospital for the wonderful care Kurt received while he was a patient in the burns unit.

Victorians are certainly fortunate to have such competent people to attend to their medical needs.

Once again, many thanks to a wonderful group of nurses. — Kurt and Lynn Jensen, Fort Nelson, B.C.

Chamber offered Arab brokerage

FORT MCMURRAY, Alta. (CP) — If you want access to $500 million of Arab capital while acting as a local agent with an annual salary of $100,000, just send $25,000 for a confidential list of Middle East investors.

So reads an offer to the Fort McMurray Chamber of Commerce from Dr. Hatem Ben Rachead Shaaban, head of the Arab Capital Fund based in Newport Beach, Calif.

Judi Dicks, chamber president in the northern Alberta community, says the letter "tempts the ridiculous," but Albert Colby, director-general of the fund, says 800 such letters have been sent to chambers of commerce around the world.

He says that because of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and turbulent domestic politics many rich Arabs are looking for investments in North America to protect their savings.

Business proposals from chambers of commerce will be presented to Arab members of royal families, millionaires and business consortiums, says Colby.

But what he won't tell you is that the United States Postal Inspection Service is investigating the World Capital Network, former name of the Arab Capital Fund, for mail fraud.

Don Porter, executive-director of the Newport Beach, Calif., Chamber of Commerce, says no evidence of fraud was found when a local investor checked out the fund.

But he says: "They should be approached with the caution of any investment opportunity promising high returns for a small investment."

Cabinet group set specially for the west

EDMONTON (UPC) — The Liberal cabinet will form a special committee of at least six ministers to deal with the concerns of western Canada, Senator Bud Olson says.

Olson, Alberta's only federal cabinet representative, told the annual convention of provincial Liberals here Friday that the committee would "try to deal more effectively with the sense of alienation in western Canada."

The minister of state for economic development told reporters later he could not reveal which of Prime Minister Trudeau's minister would make up the committee of six to eight ministers, but said its first meeting would be in two or three weeks.

Energy policies and transportation systems, he said, were examples of the "western concerns" likely on its agenda.

Subsidy cut riles east

FREDERICTON (CP) — The premiers of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are reeling in anger at Prime Minister Trudeau's announcement to phase out the $3-billion federal subsidy on oil imported into Eastern Canada.

New Brunswick premier Richard Hatfield stormed Friday at the 'cavalier' way in which Finance Minister Allan MacEachen and Trudeau announced plans to eliminate oil import subsidies without indicating any new government programs to take their place.

"The problem with the whole thing is not that they're dropping the subsidies, not that they're incorporating them into a blended price — the problem is being just so cavalier about it and so uncertain by making a suggestion like that without telling us exactly what is going to happen," Hatfield said.

Nova Scotia Premier John Buchanan, still fuming over the federal government's decision not to extend a western natural gas pipeline to the Maritimes, viewed Trudeau's announcement as another blow to the wedge separating Eastern Canada from the seat of power in Central Canada.

Under fire from Progressive Conservative MPs in the Commons Tuesday, Trudeau said the oil import subsidies will be phased out as the country moves to a blended price for oil.

The federal subsidy program for Eastern Canada, heavily dependent on imported oil for electrical generation, has been in effect since 1974.

The subsidies are expected to cost Ottawa about $3.1 billion this year.

Alta. won't fight oil tax hike

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta won't object to Ottawa imposing new taxes on consumers and oil companies provided the tax increase doesn't replace oil-price increases, Energy Minister Merv Leitch said Friday.

Leitch said in an interview that he won't fight Ottawa over a refinery tax on oil products and a profits tax on oil companies which the federal government plans to propose in oil-pricing talks with Alberta as a means to pay for foreign oil imports.

He said both taxes, which have yet to be detailed in the negotiations, will likely follow the taxing precedents developed by the former Progressive Conservative government in an oil-pricing agreement it almost concluded with Alberta.

In that deal, the profits tax would have yielded about $9 billion to Ottawa over 4½ years. The refinery tax would replace the 18-cent-a-gallon excise tax increase at the gaoline pumps which helped sink Joe Clark's government Feb. 18.

Leitch reiterated Alberta's position that it wants an energy package with net benefits to Alberta similar to the one almost reached with the Clark government.

Nature plays its hand in more ways than one

When Phil Gaglardi (remember him?) was on the banquet circuit, he used to preach the theme: "There's nothing new under the sun." Phil made his point. Nearly everything has happened before in one form or another. But I guess not now, eh? Not any more, Phil.

Because in the press this week was the startling headline: Two baseball games get 'volcanoed out'.

How about that? Who would have thought it? Rained out? Sure. Snowed out? It happens. Hurricane red? Possible. Postponed, wet grounds? Fine. Fogged out? Yes, and in more sport than one. But "volcanoed out"? Hey, that was new! But for how long?

Next day there was a similar announcement: Albuquerque at Vancouver, postponed, volcanic ash. Slightly different terminology. But same reason. The volcano's eruption had caused travel problems. Whatever. The following day it was almost old hat. The advisory was shortened to read: Ogden at Spokane, ppd, ash. Next week it will be ho hum stuff and maybe Phil was right.

Ashed-out, you say. And ash they've got in many places. Yakima was covered with inches of the stuff. Day was night. Hope it never reads lava. It would make fielding extremely difficult. Have you ever looked into the mouth of one of those craters? Such as Mt. Etna? Or taken pictures of Mt. Vesuvius when it was spilling over? You can (or could) walk around inside Etna. Most visitors to Hawaii have seen that stuff gurgling in the ground and you have to wonder what makes it bubble. Scary? You bet, especially as St. Helens had been asleep for so long . Then suddenly . . . BOOM! Ten times. I counted. Hey, what's under us?

But nature plays funny tricks at times. Even in sport. Fog is the worst enemy. It sneaks up. Remember when the Grey Cup game had to be put over because of fog. You don't? It was in Hamilton, back in 1962. Game was called when nobody could see what was going on. The final nine minutes and 29 seconds were played the following day. Winnipeg won, edging Hamilton 28-27. It seems too there was an NHL game delayed by fog in Buffalo. Inside yet.

In Vancouver they've had their problems. I was at Empire Stadium at a CFL game when you couldn't see the other side of the field from the press box. That was the game in which Willie Fleming scored a touchdown and nobody but the players and officials saw him do it.

At Exhibition Park two years ago, they had to cancel most of the horse races on the second last day because of fog and that made for the biggest day in B.C. racing history. The races postponed were re-scheduled the next day along with the regular program. The owners wanted that purse money and the losers wanted even. At Cloverdale, it rained so hard one night last fall the judges picked the wrong winning horse. They couldn't read the numbers through the mist. When they finally got to the computer read-out they found they had two winners in the same race, the one that had been announced and the real one. Both paid off. And that was really new!

At Sandown many moons ago, the heavy stuff rolled in one afternoon causing a grey-out. It didn't last long, but while it was there it contributed to an oddity. In one race eight horses went into the clubhouse turn in one order and came out on the stretch turn in reverse order. So help me. (The laughing that could be heard in the distance was from the boys up on the backstretch).

It seems we used to have more fog in the old days. Oh, I know, we're always in a fog. But it's true. That fog bank that sits off the west coast of Vancouver Island used to roll in more regularly than it does now. Well, something rolled in. Professional baseball games used to get fogged out, both here and at Vancouver, causing problems but creating a few laughs as well. A lasting recollection is of Victoria's Len Kasparovitch sneaking an old-fashioned coal-oil lantern into the outfield, lighting it, and then trying to find his way home by the flickering flame and the foul line. Funny — can't image why — but the umpires were not amused. The fans thought it was hilarious.

So all the stories aren't about "A" beating "B". Who scored seven goals in last night's game and how did he get loose that often? Was Genuine Risk fouled or was she not in the Preakness? Or who threw the first punch in the Wales vs B.C. reps rugby game Tuesday?

No. There are other items. Now "ash" is the new syndrome to watch for. Glad we don't have alligators here. Think what the head writers could do with that combo?

And if you're a baseball fan, you know what? Just this week the usually highly efficient Canadian Press, which supplies the Times with much of its material, came up with a new one.

In the National League standings, San Francisco was listed as being 8⅝ games behind the leader, Los Angeles.

Eight and five-eighths! Half the fans can't even understand 8½.

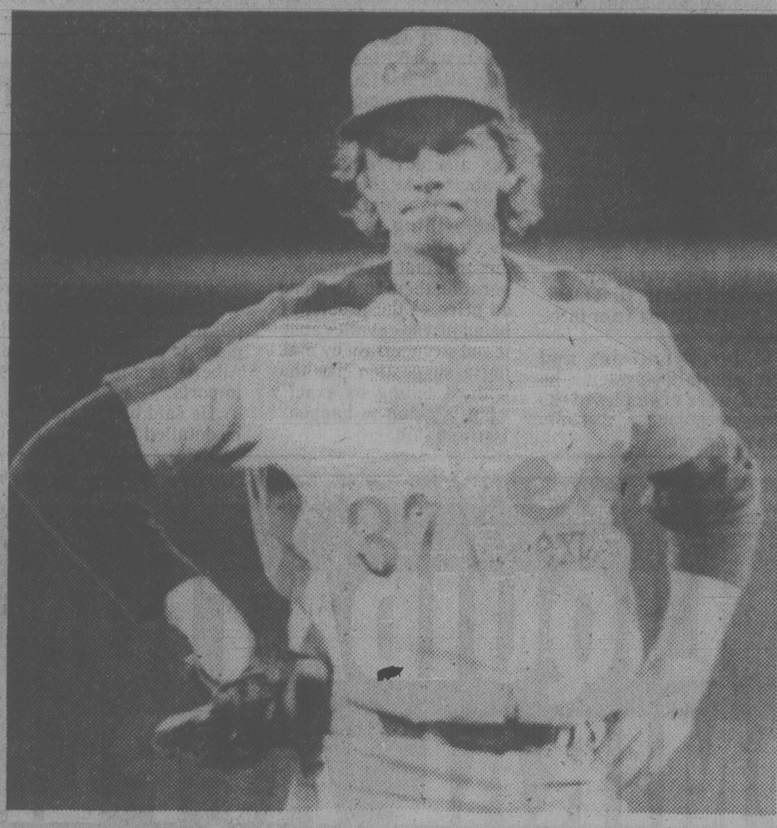
Japan joins boycott ranks



ROUGH MOMENT is reflected in expression of Montreal pitcher Bill Lee, who watches in disgust as Reds score in third inning of National League bazeball game Friday at Cincinatti. Lee got get back in groove and pitched first complete game of season as Expos beat Reds 7-4.

The Japan Olympic Committee voted today to back the boycott of this summer's Olympic Games and keep its athletes at home after the national Olympic committees of Australia and Spain decided Friday to defy the wishes of their government leaders and send teams to Moscow.

Following today's decision in Tokyo, committee chairman Katsuji Shibata, his voice breaking, said the Moscow Games would not be conducive to peace and friendship in their present form.

The Japanese government had also demanded a boycott.

The actions by Spain and Australia came on the eve of the official deadline for countries to accept invitations to compete in the Games. But in Lausanne, Switzerland, the International Olympic Committee said it will extend the entry deadline.

"There has always been a conflict in our loyalties to the government and our loyalties to amateur sport," said Syd Grange, president of the Australian Olympic Federation, which voted 6-5 to send a team to Moscow. "The great problem . . . was to reconcile these loyalties, and it wasn't an easy task."

Grange said he had been told by the International Olympic Committee that 73 countries had accepted invitations to compete in Moscow as of Tuesday, despite a U.S.-led boycott movement.

Australian Prime Minister Joe Fraser, one of the earliest supporters of President Carter's call for an Olympic boycott because of Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, was upset by the federation's decision to take part in the Games but said he would not take any further steps to prevent his country's athletes from competing.

"I pray that those Olympians who do go to Moscow do not pay the price that many of those who went to the Berlin Olympics paid once the World War started in 1939," said Fraser. "I pray that the Soviet Union willnot interpret this and other decisions as a weakening of Western will."

Spain's Olympic committee announced that it would send a team to Moscow just one day after the Spanish government said it opposed sending a team.

As expected, Nepal announced that it would participate in the Games.

An Associated Press count based on public announcements shows that there are now 53 countries that have said they are not going to competein the Summer Olympics for one reason or another. More than 60 countries have said they plan to attend.

The IOC is expected to release early next week a list of countries that have accepted invitations to compete in Moscow.

Of the 41 countries that had gold medal winners at the 1976 Olympics, only four have announced plans to boycott — the United States, West Germany, Norway and Pakistan. Canada is also among nations supporting the boycott.

However, the boycott is clearly having a diplomatic impact on the Games, which had been regarded by organizers as a showcase of the Soviet system. Because of the boycott, the Olympics will not be televised in the United States as well as several other countries, and the number of Western visitors is expected to be considerably less than had been originally projected.

'Good deal all around' but big issue unsettled

Times News Services

NEW YORK (AP) — The threatened baseball strike was averted after lengthy negotiations produced what commissioner Bowie Kuhn called "a good deal all around," but the key issue that could have led to a walkout remains unsettled.

That's the thorny question of compensation for free agents who switch teams.

Under the agreement hammered out early Friday morning, the current system that provides for compensation in the form of an amateur draft choice for a team that loses a free agent will remain in effect for the remainder of this year, and a four-man committee will be appointed to work out a new system.

The club owners had been seeking a player as compensation instead of a draft choice. This has been steadfastly opposed by the union.

The four-man committee — two representatives of the owners and two players — will begin meeting Aug. 1 and will present its findings to both sides by Jan. 1, 1981. If there is no agreement, the issue will be put to a 30-day bargaining session.

And if this does not produce an agreement, Ray Grebey, director of the Major League Baseball Player Relations Committee, said the clubs may put into effect their current proposal for compensation known as the 15-18 system that sets up a sliding scale of compensation based on the calibre of the free agent.

However, the players may also choose at that time to call a strike. They would have to give the owners notice of a strike date by March 1 or else lose the right to strike during the remainder of the four-year agreement.

Since negotiations this spring failed to produce agreement on the compensation question, Marvin Miller, executive director of the players association, was asked whether there was any reason to believe things would be different next time.

"All I can do is answer with hope that given this experience, we're going to get more sober reflection of what is the real nature of the problem," Miller said.

"Don't come with a cannon, is what that implies. The players will no more accept a unilateral turnback of their rights then that they would now. . . . There is a fundamental difference between the players' view and the owners' view. The owners say that compensation is just and equitable and ipso facto they must have it. But the players see no need for compensation.

"By that they mean they don't see what the equity of it is after they give all that service to a particular club. They also mean that there's been no demonstrated injury or damage to those clubs losing free agents, or to the game of baseball as a whole.

"Not seeing evidence of damage, they don't accept the need for compensation in the first place," Miller said.

Although there was no strike, but Bill Lee and Mike Schmidt opted for slowdowns of their own in Friday's games.

"I used slow curves, slow sliders, slow fastballs, slow everything," said Montreal's Lee, who kept Cincinnati's batters off-balance with his off-speed.

Lee scattered 11 hits in going the distance as the Expos took a 6-0 lead after two innings and coasted to a 7-4 National League baseball victory over the Reds.

Schmidt slowed down his swing, but Houston Astros still were hit hard by the impact. The Philadelphia slugger's 11th homer of the season tied him with teammate Greg Luzinski for the major league lead and carried the the Phillies to a 3-0 victory over Houston be-

Crucial period for Shamrocks

They face the two clubs above them in the standings at home, New Westminster Salmonbellies tonight and Coquitlam Adanacs next Wednesday, and in between they test the revitalized Vancouver Burrards at Kerrisdale on Tuesday.

The three games appear on the must-win list even this early in the season because the league leader on Saturday, June 21, gets to represent the WLA in the Nations-80 World Championship series.

The Rocks got by Salmonbellies in a squeaker here last time, breaking away in the final period, and the Salmonbellies evened the score at New Westminster.

And, as the Rocks have two games in hand over the Bellies, a victory is that much more important.

Since the clubs last met, the Shamrocks have strengthened with the addition of Jim Boyd, who was out with an injury earlier in the season, and Tarey Pollock, who was acquired from Nanaimo Timbermen last weekend.

Pollock, who played with Esquimalt Legion and the Shamrocks last year, was the first-round draft pick of the T-Men but declined to play in the Hub City.

He scored three goals against the Timbermen last Monday while Boyd, also a graduate of Legion, and the hero of the fourth game of the Mann Cup final last fall, contributed four.

Game time Saturday is 8 p.m.

Slurs anger Legion boss

NEW WESTMINSTER — New Westminster Salmonbellies withstood a late assault by Esquimalt Legion to score a 13-12 victory but the actions of the mainland club Friday may be carried before the Western Canada Major Junior Lacrosse League commissioner today.

Esquimalt manager Bob Reid said he "accepted the loss" — Legion's fourth in five games — but was visibly upset with "racial slurs" hurled from the New Westminster bench during Friday's game in Queen's Park Arena.

"This team (Legion) has taken about enough of this (treatment)," said Reid, adding that he is scheduled to meet today with the commissioner to discuss the problem.

Reid refused to go into specifics.

"Let's just call it racial slurs and leave it at that," he said.

The name-calling, or whatever, was the topper on a game saturated with high feelings. Esquimalt took 33 minutes in penalties and the Salmonbellies 40. Two players — Vince Cullen of Legion and New Westminster's Shawn Rouse — were ejected after becoming involved in a fight and Salmonbellies' coach Dave Wilfong also was bounced for arguing with the officials.

Legion led 6-4 after the first period but was outscored 6-0 in the second despite holding a 17-9 edge in shots-on-goal.

Esquimalt scored three power-play goals in the third period, but Westminster held on for the win.

Earl Wills led the winners with three goals. Lloyd Symons had two goals, including the winner at 15:00 of the third period, and four assists.

Geordie Bionda also scored a pair while Terry Oiom, Ross Gatenbury, Brian Cowie, Don McIssac, Dave Thornill and Dan McDonald added singles.

Ed Van Dyck, with two, Terry Jay, Brian Bell and Paul Cullen completed Legion's total.

The 'Bellies out-shot Legion 53-43.

It was 4 for Stymest but 6 for the bettors

Hitting the winner's circle only once in the first three programs of the 1980 harness racing meet, Stymest broke out with a bang Friday.

He scored with Deck Hand, Navi Baron, Saska Wind and Callaghan to become the first reinsman to win four races this season.

Six, however, was the big number. Standarbreds carrying that number hit the finish line first in five of the day's 10 races.

They were Battle Chips, Saska Wind, Woodys Kat, Amber Ferric and Deck Hand.

Well backed by a crowd of 1,160, Deck Hand covered the mile in a snappy 2:05.4 to win the featured ninth race.

Stymest's victory with Navi Baron in the second produced the day's biggest win and exactor payoffs — $17.40 and $56.70. The 10th race Triactor, with Come Back Due, Dustys Knight and Arts Choice (4-1-5) finishing in that order, paid $125.30.

Skalbania buys Flames

CALGARY (CP) — Calgary is returning to the major league scene after a three-year absence with the announcement that Vancouver millionaire Nelson Skalbania has purchased Atlanta Flames and will move the National Hockey League franchise here.

Calgary, one of North America's richest cities as the Oil Capital of Canada, has been without a major league hockey team since the former Calgary Cowboys of the now-defunct World Association folded in the spring of 1977.

Skalbania hopes the purchase will rectify what he once said was the biggest mistake in his life — selling his share in Edmonton Oilers to Edmonton businessman Peter Pocklington.

Skalbania and Pocklington were co-owners of the Oilers before Skalbania sold his share and bought Indianapolis Racers of the WHA. While the Oilers enjoyed success and joined the NHL, both the Racers and the WHA no longer exist.

The movement of the franchise, announced Friday in Calgary and Atlanta, ended weeks of speculation about who would buy the financially-troubled Flames.

Flames owner Tom Cousins had placed the team on the market in April after reporting losses of $1.7 million and $2.6 million in the last two years.

In Calgary, Skalbania refused to say how much he will pay for the team, saying only it was "too much."

Losing bidders Byron and Daryl Seaman, majority shareholders of a Calgary oil company, were reported to have offered $14 million. Skalbania would not confirm reports that he offered $16 million.

Cousins said Skalbania made a "substantial deposit" to bind the contract to sell, which will be finalized on Aug. 10.

"That's confidential," he said when asked about the terms of the sale.

Cousins said Skalbania now will make personnel decisions "but he assures me he has no plans for any changes."

It appears that coach Al McNeil and general manager Cliff Fletcher, both of whom are under contract to the Flames, will come here.

Skalbania said the Flames will move to Calgary before the beginning of the 1980-81 season and will play in the 6,500-seat Calgary Corral, home of the former Cowboys, until a new 18,000-seat coliseum is built.

The City of Calgary is seeking federal and provincial government assistance to build the coliseum, expected to cost more than $30 million. The coliseum is also a major component of Calgary's bid to stage the 1988 Winter Olympics.

Calgary Mayor Ross Alger talked to Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed Friday regarding financing of the coliseum but would not reveal details of the discussions. Lougheed has said in the past any provincial support would be for amateur sport.

Federal Sport Minister Gerald Regan, who was in Calgary Friday, was cautious when asked about the chances of federal money for the coliseum.

Slick swinger gets help from a looper,

Times News Services

Miller Barber, with the unorthodox looping backswing, was giving picture-swinging Gene Littler a golf lesson.

"That's like trying to help Stravowski play the violin — I don't know how you spell it," Barber said Friday in Dublin, Ohio, after blistering the Muirfield Village course for a record six-under-par 66 for a share of the midway lead in a $360,000 Memorial tournament.

Littler had a 68 and stayed in contention at 144.

It's some contrast at the top. The 49-year-old Barber has 11 victories and $1.4 million in earnings in 22 tour seasons. Pooley, Fiori and Jacobsen, none older than 28, have a combined pro experience of just 11 years. They have won only one tournament, a Southern Open title by Fiori.

Jim Nelford of Burnaby and fellow-Canadian Dan Halldorson easily made the halfway cut for rounds today and Sunday. Nelford, with a 71 Friday, was at 143 — five strokes off the pace — while Halldorson was just another stroke back, also with a 71.

Meanwhile, at Corning, N.Y., Donna Caponi-Young bogeyed the last hole to allow Barbara Barrow, who fired a four-under-par 68, to tie the veteran for the lead at 138 in the Ladies Professional Golf Association's $100,000 Corning tournament.

U.S. reaches fours in convincing style

WEST BERLIN (AP) — Tracy Austin breezed through her singles match against Olga Morozova of the Soviet Union in a record 38 minutes Friday, winning 6-0, 6-1 to move the United States into the semi-finals of the Federation Cup tennis tournament.

Peterbilt pulls ahead, faces Budgets tonight

Opening a British Columbia visit that will see them play eight games in four days, Peterbilt pulled into undisputed possession of first place Friday by sweeping a doubleheader on the mainland from Vancouver Thirsks, 6-1 and 5-3. The sweep improved Peterbilt's won-lost record to 8-2.

The Seattle squad faces Victoria Budgets (6-2) in a doubleheader at Royal Athletic Park tonight, starting at 7, then returns to the mainland for doubleheaders with Abbotsford and New Westminster Sunday and Monday.

Irish famine ends

CARDIFF, Wales (AP) — Northern Ireland scored a 1-0 win Friday over Wales to win the British soccer championship for the first time since 1914.

Northern Ireland had defeated Scotland 1-0 and drawn 1-1 with England for five points from the three matches. The outcome of today's game between England and Scotland — the traditional championship decider — now is purely academic.

Meanwhile, England and Poland qualified for the final of the UEFA tournament when the English beat the Netherlands 1-0 and the Poles defeated Italy 2-0. It will be England's 11th UEFA youth final.

Hearing set back for Floyd Smith

ST. CATHARINES, Ont. (CP) — A preliminary hearing in provincial court for Floyd Smith, former coach of the National Hockey League Toronto Maple Leafs, on charges of impaired driving and criminal negligence causing death was postponed today to Nov. 3.

Smith was charged in connection with an accident March 14.

Tagge cut by Lions

VANCOUVER (CP) — Veteran quarterback Jerry Tagge failed his pre-training camp medical and his three-year career with B.C. Lions appears over, the Canadian Football League club has confirmed.

"After a complete and thorough physical examination of Jerry Tagge, it is the opinion of the team's medical board that he is not fit to participate in football activities," the club said.

The team said Tagge has been placed on waivers without right of recall.

Tennis entry deadline now just one week away

For people who have been thinking about submitting entries for the annual Victoria Times Public Parks Tennis Tournament, the time is rapidly approaching when action should replace procrastination. Just one more week remains before the entry deadline arrives. For those wanting to take part in the popular competition designed for public parks-calibre players, completed entry forms must be received by the Times by 5 p.m., Saturday, May 31.

The tourney includes open and junior singles events for men and women, plus an open mixed doubles contest. Play is scheduled to begin on June 7 and wind up when semi-finals and finals of all events are contested at Oak Bay's Henderson Park on Saturday and Sunday, August 23 and 24.

As in previous years, the men's and boys' singles and the mixed doubles events are drawing the largest entries. The women and girls are again less enthusiastic about testing their talents in singles competition. However, with a week to go, there could be sudden surge of interest among the ladies.

(Official entry form below)

Opportunistic Popoff helps A's keep moving

Southpaw Mel Nelson fashioned a four-hit shutout but outfielder Wally Popoff was the one that made opportunity knock for the front-running team in the Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League.

Losing pitcher Al Strandlund matched Nelson's four-hit allowance but Athletics proved to be the opportunists in a 4-0 victory over winless Royal Oak at Central Park Friday.

Popoff accepted two of the three walks issued by Strandlund, stole one base and scored twice. His steal was of home plate.

Nelson capped his performance with 11 strikeouts.

At Heywood Park, Randy Epp homered and singled to spark Ingraham Roadway Inn to a 5-2 Heywood Men's League win over Remco Office.

At Sanscha Park, Bob Fox fired a three-hitter for his third straight shutout as Prairie Inn beat Harvey Sporting Goods 5-0 in Sidney Men's League play.

Mega-Power edged Labatts 3-2 and Coast Projects blanked Trafalgar Legion 7-0 in Macdonald Men's League action.

Highlighting weekend action at Central and Heywood Parks will be the 12-team Heywood Invitational tournament. Action got under way this morning and will wind up with the final at 5:30 Sunday at Central Park.

Fishin' fun and prizes in Saanich Inlet derby

You don't have to fish to take part in the combined Sweetheart and Junior fishing derbies staged by the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association.

But you'll miss out on a lot of the fun and some extra prizes if you don't take part in the June 7-8 fishfest reserved for female and young members of the fishing clan.

The entry fees are $2 for "sweethearts" and $1 for juniors (aged 16 and under).

Tickets are available at all Saanich Inlet marinas as well ~~as at~~ Robinson's, Gordon's, Ben Hill's and Royal Coachman tackle shops.

A bicycle donated by the Victoria Times goes to the junior catching the largest fish and the women will be vying for a watch.

Trophies will also be awarded to the VSIAA members boating the largest salmon in each category.

Draw prizes will include two four-hour guided fishing trips.

Free refreshments will be provided for the windup Sunday at 1 p.m. at Anglers' Anchorage.

Further information may be obtained by telephoning 384-3290 or 479-5200.

Lions boost camp roster

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions have increased their Canadian Football League training camp roster to 74 with the signing of two wide receivers and a defensive end.

The wide receivers are import Randy Williamson, 25, who comes to camp from Tennessee State, and Dave Franco, 23, of Vancouver, a product of the local junior football system.

Harvey Michael Mitchell III, is the defensive lineman who comes to the Lions from Ferrum College in Virginia.

The Lions say they will have about 80 players in the two-week camp that opens Monday in Courtenay.

It will be chapter No. 23 for the incomparable A.J.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — If somebody tried to write a movie script along the lines of A. J. Foyt's life, he'd probably be laughed out of the business.

Nobody would believe it.

Foyt, 45, from Houston, is a well-known figure at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway — the mecca of auto racing.

And when he starts the engine of his orange Parnelli-Cosworth prior to Sunday's 64th running of the Indianapolis 500, he will add a chapter to the story.

That race, his 23rd Indy event, will make A.J. the only driver to compete on the Speedway's 2½-mile oval in four decades.

The burly Texan first came to the Speedway in 1958, starting 12th and finishing 16th. Since then he has held — or still holds — virtually every Speedway record.

Dick Ferguson, a rookie who will start behind Foyt in the middle of the 33-car grid, said: "I can't imagine anybody being around here that long as a driver and still being as good as he is. I'm gonna keep an eye on what A.J. does and maybe I'll learn something about how to be successful at Indy."

Foyt, rarely a loquacious man, prefers not to talk about his age or his records.

"What I do on the track is the only thing that counts," he said.

There seems to be credence to what he says. The only four-time winner at Indianapolis has not finished lower than seventh since 1974, grabbing one victory (1977), two seconds and a third during that span.

He finished second to Rick Mears a year ago after being in contention the entire race.

And one certainty Sunday is that Foyt will add to some impressive records.

He already has driven 8,135 miles in race competition here, won 8,550 championship points at Indy and has won $1,318,182.73 from Speedway purses.

"To drive here the way he has has all these years is really a tribute to his ability," Mario Andretti said recently.

Andretti, who has won one race here, but has suffered through a number of lean years at the Speedway, added:

"Foyt has something that not everybody has. Maybe it's intensity or some kind of special ability. There's a lot of great drivers out here, but Foyt's something special."

The cars remained in the Speedway garages Friday, most of them being torn down and put back together with every nut, bolt and part getting a thorough inspection and tightening.

There will be two drivers meetings today — one public and one private — during which race chief steward Tom Binford will go over the rules, emphasize safety and answer any questions.

"The meetings are particuarly important this year because we have 10 rookies in the race," Binford said. "We don't want anybody taking the green flag and being confused about what they are supposed to do."

Smith drops down in Winston series

Roy Smith has dropped to fourth place in the NASCAR Winston West Grand National stock car circuit after finishing fourth with a blown clutch in his 1979 Ventura last weekend in Stockton, Calif.

Jim Robinson of California won the race and moved into first place while veteran Herschel McGriff and 22-year-old Rick McCray finished second and third, respectively, and took over those positions in the standings.

At Western Speedway, meanwhile, Greg Gicas has moved up into second place in the stock car standings behind Dale Taylor. Taylor, who won the first two races of the season, finished fourth last weekend after running into mechanical problems.

He hopes to have the kinks worked out of his 1968 Firebird by tonight and will be gunning for a third win in a program which gets underway with time trials at 7 p.m.

Gord Stone, who won the only other main event this season last weekend, has moved up to within one point of Gicas.

Dave McIntyre continues to set the pace among jalopy drivers, who will also be in action tonight.

Riders repay in draft

CALGARY (CP) — Saskatchewan Roughriders will have to give Calgary Stampeders their first-round Canadian draft in 1982, commissioner Jake Gaudaur of the Canadian Football League has ruled.

Gaudaur ruled on what compensation the Roughriders must give Calgary for the signing of quarterback John Hufnagel in April.

Gaudaur ruled the Roughriders will have to give Calgary their second protected player in 1981, their first-round Canadian draft in 1981 and their first protected player in 1982.

It was the second time Gaudaur had to intervene in a compensation dispute between CFL clubs. The first case involved wide receiver Brock Aynsley, who played out his option with British Columbia Lions in 1975 and signed with Montreal Alouettes. A Montreal protected player was awarded in that case.

"It was not really what we wanted, but on the other hand it wasn't bad for us," said Stampeders general manager Jack Gotta.

"What it does do, however, is ensure our Canadian content for the next five or six years and it will set their (the Roughriders') Canadian building program back," he said.

Saskatchewan general manager Jim Spavital wasn't too concerned by the decision: "We felt we didn't really give up anything."

Shutouts open door to final

Mokie Barrett scored a touchdown and added the two-point convert to provide Victoria with an 8-0 victory over Gordon Head while Juan de Fuca bounced Saanich 28-0 in Friday's sudden-death semi-finals at Royal Athletic Park.

There's lots to see and do this summer in Friendly Manitoba. Climb aboard the Prairie Dog Central in Winnipeg and get set for a two-hour journey that will carry you back half a century or more to the heyday of this vintage steam train.

Or step inside the thick stone walls of Lower Fort Garry, just outside Winnipeg. This is the oldest stone fort in western Canada.

A few miles up the road from Lower Fort Garry, you'll find the ship-building town of Selkirk, with a great marine museum. Drive north a little and you're at mighty Lake Winnipeg, an Icelandic fishing town, great beaches, even a resort hotel and provincial park in the middle of the lake.

Back in Winnipeg, surround yourself with refreshing summer breezes and a Broadway musical outdoors — in Canada's only domed outdoor theatre. Be our guest — tour Canada's newest Royal Canadian Mint, the Winnipeg Art Gallery and Assiniboine Park and Zoo for free.

Korean assassins hang

Times News Services

SEOUL — South Korea's former intelligence chief and four of his aides were hanged today for assassinating President Park Chung-hee, and in the provincial capital of Kwangju about 30,000 residents staged anti-government street demonstrations for the seventh day.

Shooting flared in the embattled city's suburbs where at least six were reported wounded.

Former Korean Central Intelligence Chief Kim Jae-kyu went to the gallows at a Seoul prison with four subordinates at about 7:30 a.m., a government announcement said.

Kim, 54, confessed that he shot and killed Park on Oct. 26 during a dinner at a KCIA building to restore democracy to the country. The four men hanged with Kim were convicted of killing Park's bodyguards.

Kim defended the four saying they acted on his orders, but the Supreme Court confirmed the death penalties against all of them Tuesday.

Meanwhile, South Korean troops moved into the rebellious city of Kwangju today to try and bring it under the control of martial law authorities.

Tanks and armored personnel carriers lined up across the major boulevard only one kilometre from the city centre with their guns aimed at a barricade of buses and trucks 500 metres away.

Behind the barricade, hundreds of people could be seen and the troops erected signs calling on them to lay down their arms.

Soldiers with bullhorns in front of tanks also urged the rebellious city to cease resistance, while above the city army helicopters blared out a similar call.

"We must end this disorder," said the army detachment commander, Col. Suh Won-sik. But there was no shooting and army officers said the tank guns were not loaded.

The soldiers, who clearly found their job distasteful, said they did not want to open fire on the people of Kwangju.

"This is not soldiers' business," said Suh. But he added that the army's mission was to bring order to the city.

The army had given the city a noon deadline to hand over the 3,600 guns believed to be in Kwangju but army officers said the deadline would probably be extended.

The army strategy is to press the militants into the centre of the city. On Tuesday, at the height of the insurrection, students were ranging 50 kilometres outside in the country but today they were in a small area of central Kwangju.

Miami police strike averted

MIAMI (AP) — City officials, still trying to sort out the damage from last week's bloody riots, headed off a potentially crippling police strike as the racially torn community braced for the long holiday weekend.

Riot-battered northwest neighborhoods were calm early today under the watch of 150 county police as 1,100 national guardsmen stood by at armories and warehouses.

Prospects of a police strike melted Friday as Police Chief Kenneth Harms reinstated five officers suspended for alleged misconduct during last weekend's rioting. Mayor Maurice Ferre also apologized in writing for calling the officers "bums."

The violence claimed its 16th victim Friday as Berta Roger died from injuries suffered last Saturday at the height of the rioting. The 53-year-old white woman was beaten and burned as she tried to flee from her car, which had been set afire.

Meanwhile, in good condition early today was Michael Watts, one of the four white former Dade County policemen whose acquittal by a Tampa jury in the beating death of a black man led to the riots.

Watts was found unconscious Thursday from an apparent suicide attempt as fumes from his motorcyle filled his apartment. Police spokesman Jim Baab said Watts had been despondent over personal, not legal, problems.

Tampa, the scene of scattered rock-throwing by black teenagers earlier in the week, also was quiet.

Charges were upgraded to attempted first-degree murder against Edward Powell, 20, in the sniper shooting Wednesday of a white Tampa police officer, Robert Cooke. Powell, who is black, originally was charged as an accessory after the fact of attempted first-degree murder.

In Miami, Gov. Bob Graham proposed a sales tax increase for Dade County to five from four per cent to help Miami repair its shattered neighborhoods.

Quitting tips for smokers

The possibility of becoming fat seems to them far worse than puffing on their daily cigarettes.

To help those who have these concerns, Gerald G. Haeger, director of the Adventist Health Education Centre, shares the following concepts:

After quitting, food will taste better and you'll tend to eat more.

Smokers tend to increase gradually their use of condiments and spices to offset their loss of taste. This irritates the stomach and upsets the normal process of digestion. Dropping spices will be like turning a racehorse loose.

Smoking also interferes with the body's ability to metabolize food.

Nutritional experts are finding that smoking is far worse for one's health than a little extra weight.

Women have more of a problem with weight control after they stop smoking than men because of the female metabolic lifestyle.

Choose well your breakfast foods. They should contain about one-third of the nutrients needed for the day.

Reduce your portions. This can often be done merely by using a smaller plate. If this doesn't help, start measuring your portions. The only thing one should have between meals is non-caloric beverages, preferably water.

Dr. J. Wayne McFarland, the Seventh-day Adventist physician who originated the five-day plan to stop smoking, says, "Eat breakfast like a king; eat lunch like a prince; but eat supper like pauper."

The next five-day plan to stop smoking will be held June 1-5 at the Adventist Health Education Centre, 3019 Shakespeare. Preregistration is required for all programs by calling 595-4554.

Musical on life of Jesus

The Witness, a dramatic musical presentation of the life of Christ performed by an 11-member cast from the Full Gospel Bible Institute, Eston, Sask., will be performed at Victoria High School auditorium Saturday, May 31, at 7:30 p.m.

In The Witness, the story of Jesus is told in an exciting contemporary style featuring solo numbers by Peter, James and John, Mary, Judas, Peter's wife and the mother of James and John.

Naval chapel marks 25th year

For 25 years, St. Andrew's Chapel has been the scene of great moments in the life of the naval and military community in Esquimalt.

Weddings, funerals, baptisms, confirmations, worship services and lectures, have involved tens of thousands of people in a variety of ways.

On May 22, 1955, the then Chaplain of the Fleet, the Rev. Ernie Foote, dedicated the church and set it apart for religious use in perpetuity.

On Sunday at 10 a.m., the congregation and friends will gather to commemorate the silver anniversary.

Rear-Admiral Patrick Budge, DSO, CD, RCN (Ret'd.) will be present to recall the large part he played in the original provision and dedication of the building.

The Commander of Maritime Forces Pacific, Rear-Admiral M.A. Martin, will read the first lesson.

Church chronicles

The address will be given by the Chaplain General (P) to the Canadian Armed Forces, Brigadier-General Rev. S.M. Parkhouse.

The congregation will be pleased to receive all those who wish to attend, both at the service and at the social hour which will follow.

Padre E.P.A. Timmons will take part in the service, likely his last official visit to the church prior to retirement.

The annual service of intercession of the Imperial Order, Daughters of the Empire, will be conducted at 11 a.m. Sunday at St. Mary's Anglican Church, 1701 Elgin, Oak Bay.

It will be led by Rev. M.D. Anderson. The public is welcome.

The impressive service, featuring a parade of flags of local chapters, and the Union Jack and Maple Leaf, from the front into the interior of the church, will be followed by a lunch in the church hall, after which the members will proceed to Ross Bay cemetery for a remembrance service at the cross of sacrifice at 1:30 p.m. The remembrance service has been observed for more than 60 years.

Flags will again be paraded at the cross of sacrifice, with the Navy League chapter placing flowers on the naval cairn. The service climaxes with the sounding of the Last Post.

Victoria Church of the Way will honor Pastor and Mrs. Bill Johns on their golden wedding anniversary on Sunday at 10:30 a.m. The Kingsfield Choir will present a special musical, I Promise to Love. Services are held at Leonardo Da Vinci Centre, 195 Bay.

Rev. Robert Vaughan, pastoral counsellor and consultant, will speak on The Healing of Relationships in the Home, when the Guild of Health meets at St. John's Church, 1611 Quadra, on Thursday.

A prayer service at 1:30 p.m. in the chapel will be followed by a general meeting at 2 p.m. in the lower hall.

Three altar servers who have been in the service for 12 years—Murray Anderson, Tony Anslow and Donald Lynch—were honored at Christ Church Anglican Cathedral last Sunday by receiving silver crosses.

Baptists open latest seniors' care home

The latest addition to intermediate care housing for senior citizens opened officially in Victoria on Thursday at 844 Johnson Street with Victoria Mayor William Tindall and provincial and federal government representatives among the hundreds of visitors.

The $5 million facility took 14 months to build. It is operated by the Baptist Housing Society of B.C., a non-profit foundation, and is subsidized by the provincial government.

In addition to those living in, other elderly persons can be accommodated on a day care basis or, if need be, could even stay at the centre for a weekend, Dr. John H. Pickford, chairman of the housing society and foundation, said in an interview.

Nine nurses are employed fulltime and nursing stations are staffed around the clock. Although residents are required to have their own doctors, a doctor is on call to the centre in case of emergencies.

Centre administrator is Rev. William Clayton.

The building features several lounges, a large kitchen and cafeteria, medical examination rooms and a spacious outdoor patio with benches and garden swing.

A number of craft programs are available.

The building adjoins the rear of Central Baptist Church, just across the patio on Pandora Street. The pastor, Rev. Robert Holmes, gave the blessing for the new centre.

Central Care Home is one of six projects operated by the Baptist housing organization providing a total of more than 1,000 units. The others include three highrise buildings in Vancouver, and Marrion Gardens in Oak Bay.

The Mount Edward apartments on Vancouver Street has just been acquired by the society and Dr. Pickford said it will provide another 83 intermediate care units.

He said a start is expected soon on extensive inner renovations with the occupancy target set for next spring.

Perspectives and prejudices

By REV. J.A. DAVIDSON

In times of crisis and confusion—such as the present—the Church is in danger of polarizing itself. The poles of excessive emphasis can conveniently be labelled "pietism" and "activism."

Pietism tends to be inward-looking, looking upon the local assembly or congregation as nice little religious club for nice like-minded people whose main concern in religion is their own comfort and consolation.

On the other hand, the activists concentrate on Christian outreach, often with but little concern for what they are reaching out from and why. Conflict between pietism and activism is tragic, for each, when separated from the other, proclaims a fractional, mutilated Gospel.

Relevant here are two simple sayings of Jesus which are found very close to one another in the 17th chapter of John's Gospel, "I have delivered thy word to them" (verse 14), and "I have sent them into the world" (verse 18).

Jesus is pictured at prayer, telling God about his disciples. He says that he has gathered these men around him, instructed them in the way of faith and marshalled them in a community of faith.

But he makes it clear that he has not been trying to organize his followers into a nice, pious little group for their escaping the menaces and temptations of the world. Quite the contrary—"I have sent them into the world," he says—"I have sent them into the world as agents of my concern and compassion."

These sayings are suggestive of the twofold rhythm of assembly and dispersal which has marked the life of the Church from its beginnings in New Testament times—assembly for the receiving of God's word in worship and instruction; dispersal into the world to do the work of Jesus Christ. Assembly and dispersal, congregation and mission—each sustains and supports and validates the other.

We Christians are called to withdraw from the world, to assemble ourselves regularly for worship and for nurturing in the faith, for receiving the Word of God, the Word from God that speaks healingly and redeemingly to our human predicament.

And just as regularly we must go out from our assemblies, out from our congregations, to do the work of Jesus Christ in the world, to engage in mission of witness in the world and mission of compassion to the world.

The Church must not forget that it has its New Testament authenticity only when it lives in this twofold rhythm. When it concentrates its energies and resources on the assembly phase it tends to become ingrown and uncreative, fussing frantically over the maintenance of itself as an institution simply for its own sake. There is a warning to the Church in this line from John Osborne's play, Luther: "There is no security, no security at all, in holy busywork."

But the history of the Church also shows that there is no security, no security at all, in unholy busywork, in the frantic business of dispersal that tends to forget its source and dynamic in Christian assembly. What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder.

(Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.)

Japanese pastors speak here Sunday

On Sunday at 8 p.m. a special service will be held in the Spencer Memorial Chapel of Metropolitan United Church, 1411 Quadra, when four pastors and missionaries of Japan will speak and hold a dialogue on the work of Christian churches in Japan and North America.

They come as missionaries, bringing with them their unique insights and experiences, and they come as learners, seeking to find out more about the work and witness of churches here.

They also come as bridges seeking to acquaint us with their culture, their customs, their social services, social issues and their aspirations.

They come too, as partners in the great enterprise of sharing Christ with men and women of all races and creeds.

The team comprises the following members: Mitsu Yoshiike, pastor, Kawamala Church; Hiroshi Kanno, pastor, Nijunin-Machi Church of Sendai, principal of Day Care Centre; Eiko Sato, teacher in church-related day care; Tokuzo Suzuki, member of Kojo Church; Armin Kroehler, missionary, United Church of Christ, interpreter and counsellor.

The team is using as its theme Renewal, Unity and Mission.

It will be a chance to meet and discuss with a group of Japanese Christians in the context of a short worship service.

since Tuesday's referendum that the federal and provincial governments are not likely to succeed where they have failed for 17 years and people will soon see that sovereignty-association for Quebec is the only answer.

The onus, given Quebec's decision to give federalism one more chance, is now on Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau to deliver on his promise to give Canada a revised constitution with a new deal for Quebec, Levesque said.

Levesque acknowledged the rejection of his sovereignty option by 50 per cent of French-speaking Quebecers was "a good strong slap until further notice, that's for sure . . .

"We must respect the referendum result, no matter how hard it is to swallow," he said. "By voting 'no' the majority of Quebecers gave one last chance to federalism and it's our duty to respect that and put forth all the good faith needed to participate in the talks."

The premier had no good news for Liberal Leader Claude Ryan, who remains shut out of any constitutional talks despite his referendum victory for as long as Levesque remains in the premier's office.

Levesque rejected Ryan's appeal for an early provincial election on the grounds it "would look as if we were in a panic...

"Everyone is generally tired of voting."

Levesque repeated however that he does not expect to complete his full five-year mandate and will probably call an election this fall or next spring. "The final decision is up to us, not Ryan," he said.

The premier said the PQ would be going to a constitutional conference "with an open mind" and would "put aside our option for sovereignty-association for now and not judge any proposals for constitutional change on that basis.

"If what hasn't been possible in the last 17 years becomes a possibility, we'll admit it, we're not maniacs," he said.

"I haven't the right to put our option for sovereignty-association on the table but that doesn't stop me from believing that it will soon become clear that our option is the only solution."

But he said Trudeau, who told Quebecers he and his Quebec caucus were putting their "heads on the block" for constitutional change, must now "put up or shut up."

"Trudeau and the others should start delivering the merchandise," he said. "Trudeau has been given a blank check, he has to fill it in."

The premier promised his government will staunchly defend Quebec's best interests at the talks. "Quebec needs unshakable spokesmen now more than ever."

In Charlottetown, Chretien said Friday he has found among Canadians a new pride in their country and a desire for the government to move quickly on constitutional change.

Chretien told reporters he has also found among the provincial premiers a desire for a strong federal government.

People want a government which would give everyone the opportunity to share advantages and responsibilities, he said after a meeting with Premier Angus MacLean.

Quebec exchange program continues

A student exchange program between B.C. and Quebec will continue this year, Labor Minister Jack Heinrich has announced.

The program will cost B.C. $110,000 and provide jobs for 28 Quebec students in B.C. this summer.

Work will be made available for the same number of B.C. students in Quebec.

"In addition to providing summer employment, it enables each student to gain an insight into the social, cultural and economic aspects of both provinces," the minister says.

The program was established last year.

Quebec students working in B.C. will be involved in a wide range of activities, including research and cataloguing of artifacts at the Provincial Museum; preparation of curriculum materials for teachers who are learning French as a second language, and analysis of the need for additional recreational facilities in B.C. communities.

B.C. exchange students will conduct guided tours of Quebec City's historic sites, assist in budget preparations, participate in agricultural research projects and evaluate the financial needs of theatre groups in the province.

The exchange program ends Aug. 22 and will provide 13 weeks work for each student.

Salaries, benefits and working conditions are established through negotiations between the Government Employee Relations Bureau and the B.C. Government Employees Union.

Wages for students vary with their education level. First and second-year students will receive $788 a month while third and fourth year students will be paid $892 monthly.

Graduate students will receive $1,028 a month.

65,000 limit at La Ronde

MONTREAL (CP) — The city has laid down a new regulation at La Ronde, the amusement park at the Man and His World exhibition, to close the gates to the site when the crowd reaches 65,000. The move came after dozens of people were injured last weekend when 80,000 crushed into the grounds to watch a fireworks display.

When I was a kid my Grade 4 teacher Miss Roberts (the one with the interesting sweaters) told me that parliament is the crucible in which the raw ore of politics is melted down to produce the pure gold of the law.

Miss Roberts, now doubtless a doddering but well-developed octogenarian, is due for a crushing disappointment.

Can you bear to hear this, ma'am? Wouldn't you rather I just banged the chalk dust out of the blackboard brushes? Well if you insist . . .

I'm sorry indeed to tell you, Miss Roberts, that the parliamentary process as practiced in British Columbia is less of a crucible and more of a crock.

The legislature — marble, oak, stained glass and all — is the noble setting for an ignoble Punch-and-Judy show.

Where superior sentiments might be expected, we get instead the buffoon being hit over the head with a salami. Pie in the face as well as pie in the sky.

The victory of the clowns was never more apparent than in Thursday's debate in which the NDP and the Socreds re-enacted the battle over state-operated car insurance.

ICBC was our idea and you guys are just secret socialists and nyah, nyah, nyah, was Dave Barrett's cogent argument.

We made it work; you guys ran it into the red, was Bill Bennett's response — conveniently forgetting that the $181 million ICBC deficit in 1976 was a figment of Socred bookkeeping.

The argument lasted for most of the afternoon. Government and opposition vied for the laurels for inaccuracy, innuendo and insult.

Miss Roberts, had she been there, would have cracked a few knuckles with her pointer and set them all to write, 500 times: "I shall not waste the people's valuable time on self-serving stupidity."

Where are you when we need you, Miss Roberts?

Do you recall the aerial photographs of the area around Mount St. Helens after the eruption? All those trees lying there like the world's biggest game of pick-up-sticks, blown down by the blast.

One official was quoted as saying there was enough timber on the ground to build 200,000 homes.

If that's true, and if the timber can be rescued from the mud and flood, the B.C. forest industry might just as well shut up shop for a few years.

Our major wood export market is the United States. We have already been hard hit by the slump in that market, with 7,000 IWA members laid off and more due to get their notice any day now.

I'm no expert but from the photographs I would say a good deal of the blow-down timber around Mount St. Helens is salvageable.

Sawmill operators in Washington state will be under pressure to process that timber before it begins to deteriorate. The mills will be working at top capacity.

Logs that can't be handled now will either be stockpiled or exported to the Orient.

British Columbia's normal lumber markets will be up to their armpits in two-by-fours from Washington.

Forests minister Tom Waterland says he doesn't think the situation will affect B.C.

Sure Tom, and what do you hear from the tooth fairy?

Word has filtered out of the remote, rain coast community of Ocean Falls that most of the 1,100 residents are either drinking, drunk or sobering up for another bash at it.

Don't judge them too harshly. What would your reaction be if you were told you had no job, your home was valueless and your town was about to become a ghost town?

It doesn't matter whether the government will follow through on its commitment to eventually set up a small sawmill operation at Ocean Falls or whether — as the NDP claims — it's all a cruel hoax.

For the people there, what's happening now is what counts. And what's happening now is the end of a gentle way of life.

I was in Ocean Falls only once and I loved it. Sure it was raining. But the scenery was sensational and the feeling of serenity, friendliness and community spirit was inescapable.

I stayed one night and flew out the following morning, vowing some day to return. I didn't. Now it's too late.

Hey there you guys, have one for me.

Solution seen on fire safety

Victoria Ald. Bob Wright said today he's confident a dispute over fire safety at two city nursing homes can be resolved.

Wright, chairman of the city's fire prevention services committee, commented after he and three other aldermen toured the nursing homes Friday in connection with an appeal against strict fire safety improvements ordered for both premises.

They inspected Grant Place and Glenshiel Hotel.

"We have to weigh the burden of the cost factors along with the need to assure complete safety," Wright said.

One option is the possibility that the Glenshiel might be phased out floor by floor.

The committee will consider possible areas of compromise, Wright said, although it retains the right to either allow the full appeal or to reject the appeal completely.

"The issue comes down to a question of costs," he said.

Ironically, the city is enforcing provincial government requirements and has caught the province in its own web.

The Glenshiel is owned by the province and Grant Place, while privately-owned, gets its revenue from the government.

The problem facing Grant Place, Wright said, is that it can't unilaterally increase its rates to obtain funds to pay for the upgrading ordered by the fire department, because its rates are fixed by the government.

The fire department is enforcing the recently-amended national building code, including requirements for smoke and heat sensors, fire separation barriers, wide corridors and improved lighting and fire escapes.

The smiles on the students' faces tell how Esquimalt folk feel about retiring principal Isaacson

They'll turn out Tuesday to show him they care

Les·bids adieu but leaves a mark

By AB KENT

Les Isaacson — a man of many talents — is calling a distinguished career quits and ex-pupils, parents, teachers and school figures plan to see he goes out in style with an appreciation night Tuesday at Macaulay School.

Even as a 20-year-old private in the Warwickshire Regiment, Isaacson showed signs of being a gifted teacher.

Teaching, however, was the last thing he had on his mind as he and his mates fought a rearguard action across Belgium and northern France and finally escaped the Nazi invaders at Dunkirk 40 years ago.

But the army, sensing his real strength, made him a sergeant and instructor then posted him to Northern Ireland in preparation for the expected German landing on British soil.

A year later England still awaited the invader, and in hopes of finding more action Isaacson transferred to the Royal Air Force, becoming a pilot in October 1941.

He was made an instructor and ended up back in the classroom teaching flyers navigation, a role he was to keep for the rest of the war, and which led ultimately to his long and happy association with Greater Victoria schools.

At the end of the war, Isaacson took an emergency teaching course at Leavesden Green Training College near London and spent the next four years teaching civilians, playing soccer and becoming a Football Assocation referee.

By 1951, he and and his wife, May, came home to Victoria and he took up his first job in Oak Bay, teaching at Monterey elementary for three years.

He then became vice-principal at Quadra in 1954 and was named principal of Macaulay when it opened in 1955.

He stayed for 13½ years then in 1969, was named principal of George Jay elementary. In 1971, he started a four-year spell as principal of Cedar Hill Junior Secondary before returning to Macaulay in September, 1975.

At Macaulay he introduced the area's first elementary French program, responding to armed forces parents whose children had been taking similar classes in eastern Canada.

Since last January, Isaacson has been seconded to the school district's French program and comes into contact with teachers and classes at 14 different elementary schools a month, seeing about 1,200 children for 20-30 minutes per class.

Although his experience with French dates from his own school days and his military service in France, Isaacson says he is not bilingual.

"My success in teaching French is because I know the language and I know how to teach."

Many would agree.

But Isaacson will be remembered for his fairness and understanding, traits which have endeared him to ex-pupils, parents and teachers.

"I think the truth of it is I've met them at their level and done what I could to meet their wishes if they fit the alternatives. I haven't always pleased the parents," he said.

Isaacson has been respected too for his approach to discipline.

"I have used the strap, but never without first consulting the parents."

Isaacson is aware of great changes in the teaching profession, having helped bring much of it about as a 10-year member of the teachers' learning conditions committee, as a member of the B.C. Teachers' Federation executive from 1969-71 and as president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association from 1970-71.

He was also secretary-treasurer of the Principal's and Vice-principal's Association of GVTA.

He's been involved in refereeing in coast league soccer, served as presidency of the island Juvenile Soccer League for seven years and was a member of the senior soccer league disciplinary committee.

He also found time to hold the presidency of the Victoria Duplicate Bridge Club.

"Teaching is a heavier job today than 30 years ago," Isaacson said. "It's tougher now with more community involvement.

"If you're doing a job you have ups and downs. If you please everyone all the time you are not doing a job."

As a fitting tribute to Isaacson, his friends have decided to present a perpetual school trophy to be given to students for achievement in the elementary French program.

Gun battle suspects nabbed

Ganges RCMP have two 21-year-old men in custody in connection with a break-in and gun battle on tiny Jackscrew Island Thursday afternoon.

The men are to appear in court charged with breaking and entering.

Six officers and the dogmaster and tracking dog arrested the suspects on Kuper Island opposite Chemainus at 3:30 p.m. Friday.

The two surrendered without a struggle.

Police said one of the suspects has an injury to his leg which a doctor in Ganges said may have been caused by a bullet.

An unidentified man and woman, the sole occupants of Jackscrew Island, located north of Salt Spring between North Galiano and Kuper Islands, arrived home Thursday to find two men carting off their belongings.

Duncan man charged in wife's death

Police found her body April 26 in an apartment in Lahaina, a major tourist community on the island.

Large is a director of both the K and R food stores chain and Datatech Services Ltd. of Victoria.

Blind spearhead rights fight

By BRENDA DALGLISH

B.C.'s blind have launched a drive to win full rights for all handicapped people in the province.

At a conference this weekend at the University of Victoria, blind delegates are mapping strategy to have of B.C.'s disabled and handicapped people included in the province's human rights legislation.

About 30 delegates to the annual conference of the B.C. and Yukon division of the Canadian Council of the Blind will learn basic lessons in organization.

Del Graham, who heads the legislation committee from the local branch of the council, says handicapped people are just beginning to organize and she expects a long battle to win the rights and public awareness needed.

"Handicapped people are the only minority that aren't covered by human rights legislation in this province," Graham said.

"Right now in B.C., the blind can be denied jobs strictly on the grounds that they're blind — no consideration has to be made of their qualifications or abilities."

Graham said she went through the entire process of applying and being hired for a government job.

On the first day she showed up for work — before she was given any opportunity to show what she was capable of — she was told she couldn't do the job.

Graham said statistics show that one in seven Canadians is classified as handicapped.

"When enough of those people get fed up with the way things are and learn how to organize, the government will be forced to recognize their human rights," she predicted.

"Part of the conference will be aimed at getting blind people to understand what they can do to change things."

Graham said the government has been asked to conduct a public awareness campaign, similar to the alcohol abuse campaign, to inform people about handicapped people.

Increased public awareness and legislative changes must go hand in hand, she said.

Bus changes will be gradual

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Greater Victoria residents won't see many improvements in bus service until January, according to Dennis Grimmer, Urban Transit Authority director for the Capital Region.

By then, 29 new buses painted with the orange-striped UTA logo should be ready to beef up the transit system, Grimmer said.

The first major change noticed by most residents will be a tripling of service to the Western Communities and Saanich Peninsula.

"Obviously it's fair to say the suburban communities have been under-serviced," Grimmer commented.

And Victoria Mayor Bill Tindall said that until the new buses arrive, most changes will be promotional ones aimed at getting more people to use the system.

"On a day-to-day basis there will be very little that's visible to the general public," Tindall said.

Until last year, Greater Victoria transit was handled by B.C. Hydro.

It is now controlled in a three-way agreement between the Capital Region District, the Urban Transit Authority of B.C. and Metro Transit Operating Co. (formerly B.C. Hydro transit division).

The CRD is responsible for local planning policy and finances 25 per cent of the annual operating deficit.

The UTA picks up 75 per cent of the annual deficit, handles major financing, makes general policy decisions and supplies the buses.

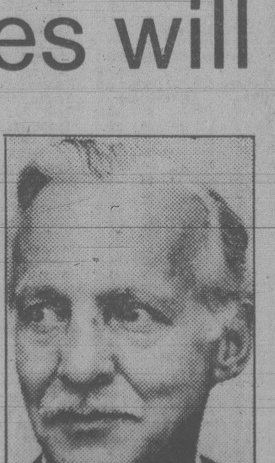
The three bodies have a joint operating agreement that sets out the annual budget — $11.9 million this year — and yearly service program.

Grimmer said the UTA is now concentrating on a marketing strategy to improve public awareness.

Daily bus passes are part of that strategy and will be available starting next month. A program for monthly passes should be ready by September, he said.

New timetables, issued every four months, will be circulated Friday dressed up in the UTA colors.



TINDALL

Color co-ordinated bus signs will be erected during the next few months. Buses will be painted with the distinctive orange band along the side over a five-year period.

Evaluation has not been completed of an experimental program adding wheelchair lifts to four buses on the Beacon Hill route, said Grimmer.

But a custom transit service using vans to transport handicapped in the Capital Region is now being developed and should be ready by the fall, he said.

The vans, including the Lion's Easter Seal buses, will be painted with the orange UTA colors.

Grimmer said the UTA hopes to encourage commuter travel between Sidney and Victoria by improving bus service in January.

The present service is a tourist special that winds through Brentwood and Cordova Bay and takes an hour and 15 minutes.

The ride will be trimmed to a 50-minute express run by switching to the Pat Bay Highway at Saanichton. Buses will leave hourly and at half-hour intervals in rush hour.

More links and more frequent service will be established between communities like Langford and Colwood.

Bus service from the Western Communities to Victoria will also improve.

For example, the bus to Langford, now leaving Victoria at 1½-hour intervals between 7:30 a.m. and 6 p.m., will leave every 30 minutes between 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. and on the hour from then until midnight.

Juan de Fuca Recreation Centre will be the main transfer point where passengers can switch buses.

The recreation centre parking lot will also be used for a park-and-ride system now being planned between Colwood and Victoria.

Information value rising with change

TORONTO (CP) — As the Western world changes from an industrial society to an "information society," knowledge will become a crucial corporate resource on par with energy, labor and capital, says Ian Wilson, a public policy analyst for General Electric Co. of New York.

In an interview, Wilson said education and information are important tools during periods of uncertainty and change.

"Dealing with continuous, radical change requires a continuous learning and adaptation process," he said.

He says companies are often too rigid in their approach to planning and fail to anticipate change.

"They are saying the future is certain. They should be facing up to uncertainties by constantly looking at alternative scenarios as the environment changes."

Carter moving to ease recession

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration, concerned that the U.S. economy may be slowing too much too soon, is moving to keep runaway inflation from being replaced by runaway recession.

Administration economists acknowledged Friday that slackening demand by consumers worried about the recession was one of the reasons that consumer prices rose in April by the smallest amount in more than a year.

At the same time, Treasury Secretary G. William Miller said the inflationary psychology of "borrowing for fear there's no tomorrow" has been broken and "it's time to go back to normal consumer behavior."

The labor department reported that its Consumer Price Index rose 0.9 per cent in April, a significant decrease from the 1.4-per-cent increases recorded during each of the first three months of this year. The last time consumer prices rose by less than one per cent a month was January 1979.

The April figure translates to an annual inflation rate of 11.5 per cent — still high but an improvement over the 18-per-cent annual rate that persisted during the first quarter of 1980.

Miller said it is too soon to say whether the sharp economic downturn signals a deeper recession than expected but he conceded that "the risk seems to be for some slightly greater contraction that we had put in the economic report."

He suggested that credit restrictions, imposed March 14 and relaxed Thursday to soften the effects of recession, are no longer needed.

"We are not trying to restrain normal consumer spending," he said. "What we were trying to nip in the bud was the anticipatory buying and borrowing, as if there were no tomorrow as sort of a frenzy. And I think that's been broken. I think we have to give Americans a lot of credit. They answered very clearly what the president said: 'Stop overdoing it.' And they stopped."

The labor department said the biggest factor behind the slowdown was the fact that gasoline prices showed no increase in April — the first time that has happened in two years. Since April 1979, gasoline prices have jumped 60 per cent.

Food, housing, medical care and entertainment also registered smaller price increases in April than in March and further moderation was expected through the spring.

The administration has predicted that inflation, will fall to about 10 per cent by summer.

N.Y. banks set phoney prime

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Federal Reserve Board study shows that high prime rates charged by major New York banks early this year were artificially inflated, with true lending rates substantially lower, the chairman of the House of Representatives banking committee said Friday.

Representative Henry Reuss (Dem.—Wis.) said an unpublished survey by the Federal Reserve for the first three months of 1980 shows that 66.96 per cent of business loans made by "large New York banks" were below the prime rate.

That compared with 28.85 per cent below-prime rate loans in the last quarter of 1979, he said.

Reuss charged that by posting prime rates in the 20-per-cent range but actually charging large corporate borrowers as little as 14 per cent, the big banks unfairly discriminated against others whose interest rates were computed from the posted prime.

1979 travel deficit down at $1.07B

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada 1979 travel deficit was $1.07 billion, significantly below the record 1978 level of $1.7 billion, Statistics Canada said Friday.

The country earned $2.88 billion from international travel during 1979, up 21.4 per cent from 1978, while spending by Canadians travelling abroad fell 3.2 per cent to $3.95 billion.

Revenue from Americans travelling here reached $1.88 billion, up 14 per cent from 1978, while those from other nationals hit the $1-billion level for the first time.

Canadians spent $2.45 billion in the United States, down 3.8 per cent and spent $1.5 billion travelling in all other countries, a drop of 2.2 per cent from 1978.

The first-quarter travel deficit is $889 million, down 3.4 per cent from the first quarter of 1979.

Canadians earned $316 million from international travel during the quarter and spent $1.2 billion.

Shared rulings urged on cable

VANCOUVER (CP) — The cablevision system in Canada should be redesigned so community and corporate interests share in making decisions about the medium, the Vancouver Community Television Association said Friday.

The association, the advisory body to Vancouver's Cable 10 community channel, told the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) it opposes a proposal by Canadian Cablevision Systems of Toronto to take over Premier Communications of Vancouver which runs the Vancouver community channel.

The merger, which is the subject of CRTC hearings here, would create Canada's largest cablevision company.

Association spokesman Penny Joyce said the public and private interests in cablevision should share in corporate control and programming aims.

The association told the hearing that CCL had offered the association a Vancouver-Victoria public television station if the takeover was approved but the association rejected the offer.

Earlier, a confrontation between author Herschel Hardin and Roy Faibish, CRTC member, was defused when Hardin withdrew remarks made in a brief to the commission.

At a hearing Thursday, Hardin was told by commission counsel Avrum Cohen that failure to withdraw the remarks might lead to a citation of contempt of court. The CRTC has the powers of a court.

He was given until Friday to obtain legal advice. During his appearance at Friday's hearing with lawyer Don Rosenbloom, he said he would withdraw the remarks if they offended Faibish.

"I think that was a wise decision," Faibish replied.

Faibish had objected to four lines contained in a brief written by Hardin on behalf of Victoria's Capital Cable Co-operative, of which he is general manager.

Before Hardin announced his decision, Faibish stressed that he had not specifically threatened a contempt citation at the Thursday hearing, but refused to say what he would do to Hardin if he did not withdraw or change his remarks.

Capital Cable has long fought for the principle that competitive bids should be allowed when cablevision licences are transferred, he said, and the organization would like the CRTC to hold a separate hearing for the transfer of the Victoria cable licence, at which Capital Cable would be allowed to bid for it.

The CRTC's position, Hardin said Friday, has led to a situation where "a wealthy and powerful Toronto holding company is allowed to apply, while British Columbians are excluded."

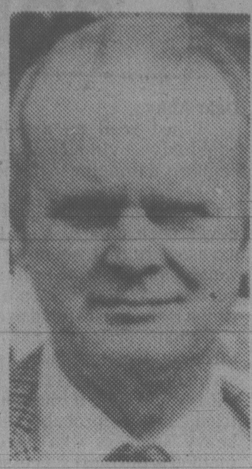
Dr. Pickup: is alcohol a problem?



PICKUP
. . . just two a day

The residents of this fishing town on an island off the northeast of Vancouver Island, are debating a referendum of their own on the question: Is Jack Pickup fit to practise here?

The consensus is that it is too much to expect the doctor, when off duty, to closet himself like a monk and stay stone cold sober, at the top of his form as a healer, 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

At the Legion, Pickup is buying.

"Sure, I drink, so do most people. I have been here (at the Legion) and been called down to the hospital with liquor on my breath.

"Was I drunk? Drunk is neither a legal or medical term. All I can tell you is that I've never been impaired."

What then of the several accounts at Dr. Gary Goldthorpe's recent federal inquiry into Indian health care about Pickup, staggering with liquor on his breath at the hospital?

"Dr. Pickup is an alcoholic in need of treatment," Goldthorpe said in his report.

Pickup replies that his accusers were either honestly mistaken or part of a smear campaign he traces to a small, radical group within the Nimpkish Indian band, the largest native group in the area.

"The radicals want me out so that they can take over health care up here even though they haven't got the competence to do it."

Pickup, 61, is a slender man with deep-set blue eyes that give him an intense, withdrawn look. He is introverted enough to refuse to pose for pictures.

As Legion president, he has the run of the place. He walks to the bar and comes back with two more beers and another rye.

"This, by the way, is my quota," he says. "I do not drink in the daytime and rarely drink before supper."

Until recently, it was his habit to go to the Bayside Hotel, a block away from the hospital, "for a couple before supper; but I can't do that any more because of all the hassle."

He says he is bitter about one-sided coverage of the radical group's campaign, about coverage of an inquest last year into the appendicitis death of an 11-year-old Nimkpish girl and Goldthorpe's finding that the girl's death and two other deaths at St. George's could be traced to "Dr. Pickup's errors in judgment or neglect."

"Dr. Goldthorpe never talked to me about any of the accusations against me."

There also is a hint of bitterness when asked if he's hanging on here so that his daughter, Roma, a third-year medical student, can take over the practice.

"I tried to talk her out of becoming a doctor," Pickup says. "There's no way I would want her here."

His only comment on what he earns is that his net income for 1979 was $60,000. On the basis of the $133,486 gross payments to H. J. Pickup and Associates by the B.C. Medical Services Commission for the year ended March, 1979, he's among the highest-paid general practitioners in B.C.

"I saw an ad for a doctor here and came west," said Pickup, a native of Cardston, Alta., and a graduate of Queen's University in Ontario.

The same year he got a pilot's licence and bought a Waco, a biplane with floats, to become the area's flying bush doctor. Before he quit flying in 1970, he had logged 1,000 hours, most of it on flights to remote logging camps and Indian settlements. His only mishap was to hit a log while landing on Nimpkish lake.

He says he is busier as a doctor than he has ever been, averaging 30 patients a day at his afternoon clinics.

Next door to Pickup's clinic, there is the office of Dr. Elaine Ling, assigned to Alert Bay by the federal health department as one of a procession of backup doctors working here during the past two years. Dr. Ling is treating about five patients a day.

Diane Pagani, a licensed practical nurse in Pickup's office, says there has been no decline in his practice even though the "group at the other end of town (the Nimpkish band radicals) have been making threats against patients who come to see him."

"He's still my doctor."

"I've got five kids and Dr. Pickup delivered every one of them," says Mrs. Delores Wilson. "If I thought he was an alcoholic, he wouldn't be my doctor."

Jim Speck, long-time resident and the Legion bartender for last two years, credits Pickup for getting him off the bottle.

"I've been off the booze for 4½ years, thanks to him. I was up to 298 pounds but under his care, I'm holding it at 198."

Love that Hydro, Bennett pleads

SURREY (CP) — People should start thinking positively about B.C. Hydro, Premier Bill Bennett said Friday.

Speaking at the official opening of Hydro's new $20 million research and development centre, Bennett said it is easy to criticize Hydro.

"But I'd like to hear the screams and cries the day the light switch doesn't work," the premier said. Precisely this point, Bennett's microphone went dead, and his speech was delayed while the sound system was fixed.

Bennett said the $20 million will be "money well spent" because there is a potential to save $30 for everh dollar spent on research.

Hydro chairman Robert Bonner said the centre will provide the Crown corporation with the means to solve problems that previously couldn't be dealt with.

"We seek to solve everyday working problems," he said. "We can now test equipment that we previously had to send overseas."

Hydro railway can't say no

VANCOUVER (CP) — B.C. Hydro's railway cannot legally refuse to carry dangerous shipments as long as they are properly packaged, Hydro chairman Bob Bonner says in a letter to city council.

People who live near the Arbutus corridor used by the railway have been worried about the hazards posed by the shipments of dangerous commodities, and council recently asked Hydro to report on the number and types of shipments and whether alternative methos of moving the commodities are available.

With DOROTHY FRASER

Real chic in these new skirts . . .

Wonderful what you can do with a smart new skirt! . . . Ring in numerous wardrobe changes with a variety of blouses, toppers and sweaters . . . Add a jacket or blazer and you've got what amounts to a new suit! . . . At Wilson's this week we were shown some new arrivals in skirts for spring and summer . . . The Sportcraft skirts in navy, red or beige cotton/polyester are very chic with their striped grosgrain belts and grosgrain stripe running down the right side of front, outlining its deep wrap slit . . . Another nice skirt is by Petri of Sweden . . . Trevira and rayon accordion pleated all around . . . in white, red, navy or black . . . Completely washable and permanently pleated . . . There's a beautifully tailored 100% white wool skirt by Shiffer Hillman . . . A double inverted pleat and slit off-centre in front . . . completely lined . . . and fully-lined pants in the same fabric . . . These latter have unfinished bottoms which Wilson's will finish to your measure free of charge, just as they do men's trousers . . . Both Shiffer Hillman garments are tagged at $100 each . . . and well worth it, too! . . . Wilson's have a lot of other spring and summer skirts in various styles and fabrics . . . Have a look at them . . . You'll be enchanted! . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and Oak Bay, 592-2821.

Something completely different in a bedroom suite caught our eye at Standard Furniture this week . . . Actually it was in one of the windows, but we went in for a closer look and some first-hand information, and found that the whole suite consists of separate units made of something with a mar-proof melamine finish which has the appearance of a rich, medium-shade oak, even to the attractive wood grain! . . . There are something like 14 different units and bits and pieces that can be mixed and matched . . . versatile like you wouldn't believe! . . . To name a few . . . there are single and double headboards with a shelf on top for books, radio or whatever . . . Wall units with shelves or a combination of shelves and cupboards . . . or with a desk . . . which can sit on either side of the bed . . . linked together with a light bar overhead . . . This combination is pretty spiffy we can assure you! . . . There are double and single chests of drawers . . . Mirrors in several sizes . . . a wardrobe to end all wardrobes . . . with deep drawers underneath . . . chests with cupboards as well as drawers and goodness knows what all . . . which, in various combinations, can provide striking, space-saving furniture for adults' or kiddies' bedrooms . . . while some of the wall units would be just as appropriate for family rooms . . . This new furniture is very modern, very well-built . . . and very well-priced at . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

Summertime is play-time . . .

Thinking about summer . . . and warm sunshine . . . and things to wear in your care-free hours? . . . Then hurry to Charmante's and have a look at their great selection of playwear! . . . No matter what your age, size, or figure shape, you're bound to find a swimsuit which will be just right for you, as well as being as pretty as anyone could wish! . . . Wraps, caftans, coats . . . in terry and cotton/poly blends in a variety of lovely shades as well as white . . . Shorts in yellow or white crisp poly/acrylic blend . . . with elastic at the back and sides . . . Velour shorts in white and cream, and colorful tops to mix and match . . . Patio dresses in long or regular lengths . . . Terry and cotton sundresses to let you get a nice tan . . . and leather thongs from Hawaii . . . What more could anyone ask for for fun in the sun? . . . Just arrived is a group of bone dacron/poly Italian knits from Mario Romano . . . There's a skirt with modest front slit . . . Straight pants with wide leg . . . A ribknit collarless cardigan, a round-necked mesh knit pullover top and a mesh knit shell with cap sleeves . . . All these in versatile bone . . . Super for travelling! . . . Charmante's, Hillside Shopping Centre, 595-1555.

For a memorable graduation day . . .

When we dropped in to Lady Mary Anne the other day we were downright dazzled with their big selection of long gowns eminently suitable as graduation dresses or for weddings! . . . Young women graduates are going in for more elegance this year . . . a more sophisticated look that still manages to be youthful . . . Two cases in point are a halter neck dress with eyelet embroidery . . . on white sheer forming the bodice and three deep skirt flounces . . . the whole thing lined with blue . . . It's a really stunning dres . . . as is another in pink polyester chiffon. This one with skirt flounces too, and frill around the neck . . . Narrow satin sash . . . Border prints, we hear, are very much in demand this year . . . and Lady Mary Anne has some beauties . . . For the gal who wants to be really chic, understatedly elegant . . . there's a silky violet polyester jersey gown with v-neck . . . a complete wrapover, with a side drapery on the back of the bodice and a gold belt . . . Prices for these dresses range from $80 to about $150 . . . Lots of delightful short cocktail dresses too . . . both plain and patterned . . . We saw some very smart suits . . . among them a 3-piece black suit by Bernard Cowan and a double-breasted white with black buttons and belts . . . Qiana raincoats in every style and color . . . in regular sizes up to 18, and petites up to 14 at . . . Lady Mary Anne Fashions, 706 Fort St., 383-7552.

New Ports at Eaton's . . .

We always think there's nothing quite like clothes bearing the Ports label! . . . Eaton's Signature Shop has some great new Ports in . . . notably some 100% cotton cord casual pants, in a slightly wider wale than heretofore . . . and even better fitting, if that were possible! . . . They're cut with a smaller waistline, fuller hips and no pockets so as to be flattering to rounder figures. Colors are mocha, navy, winedust and a new grey-blue shade, and price is $50 . . . Washable, of course . . . and as we said, a fantastic fit! . . . Then there are new Ports 7-gauge cotton knit sweaters . . . V-neck pullovers in grey-blue, red and denim blue, and round crewnecks in red . . . $48 . . . A new Ports blouse with tuxedo neckline and gathered yoke front and back is 100% cotton, fine as voile . . . Comes in violet, denim bue and red at $90 . . . This is a real dressy blouse you could wear anywhere . . . There are short-sleeved cotton shirts with two patch pockets and turn-back cuffs in denim blue, natural, green, pink and white . . . Nice and cool for summer! . . . Price for these is $42 . . . Finally, a plain, long-sleeved cotton shirt with 1-button cuff, in the traditional, slim-fitting style . . . This is priced at $45 and comes in moonstone, denim, terracotta and claret . . . Eaton's Signature Shop, 382-7141, loc. 242.

Summery dresses you'll love! . . .

If you're looking for a smart dress to take you cooly through the summer that's almost upon us . . . do pay an early visit to Roy Imports because they have some really nice new ones . . . A Deja dress with jacket is camel and cream crinkle cotton with a small design . . . Long-sleeved jacket and sleeveless dress . . . Just one, in a size 10, but if you're a size 8 or 12 you can have the same style in navy with a little different white design . . . Another good-looking Deja outfit is a seersucker dress and jacket . . . Blue and white stripes in size 12 . . . charcoal and white stripes in 10 and 14 . . . These striped dresses are also sleeveless and have polka dotted separate scarves and matching hankies in the breast pocket of the jacket . . . If you've ever worn Deja you don't need us to tell you how well-made they are and how beautifully they fit! . . . Other new dresses at Roy's are by Shrader Sport of New York, and these, too, are extremely handsome! One is brown and cream striped cotton shirt dress with an old-fashioned print facing the turn-back collar and cuffs . . . set-in belt tying in front . . . Another is poly/cotton in brown/blue/cream stripes with a narrow frill edging the little collar and the top of the breast pocket . . . Still another is brown polyester with variegated white stripes . . . Roy's have a lot of summer dresses for as low as $60 . . . and even lower . . . like the little one-and two-piece blue chambrays in the $50 range! . . . Roy Imports, 435 Simcoe St., 384-4932 and 9807 Third St., Sidney, 656-3522.

Hawaii or Mexico in summer? . . .

Maybe you've always equated Hawaii and Mexico as winter holiday destinations . . . but we have it on good authority that they're every bit as delightful in summer . . . Not too hot . . . and considerably less expensive . . . Paulin's now have Sunflight's summer/fall brochures listing departure dates and itineraries of holiday packages to Mexico and Hawaii which started this month and carry through until December . . . To Hawaii, there's a 2-week holiday to either Waikiki Beach or to Maui . . . Or one week in Waikiki plus one week on Maui or the big island of Hawaii, or Kauai . . . You have a choice of fine hotels in all of these places . . . and in the case of the Kona Bali Kai on Hawaii, they give you a self-drive car with the first 50 miles free! . . . There are all sorts of other goodies too like Lei greeting . . . champagne breakfast etc. Those Sunflight people certainly go all out for their guests, we assure you! . . . Then there's the Mexican tour . . . Sunflight's Mexico Magnifico . . . an exciting two-week holiday in magnificent Mexico City, the silver city of Taxco, and fabulous Acapulco . . . Escorted motorcoach from Mexico City to Acapulco . . . A "Fiesta Mexicana" in Mexico City . . . Go in to Paulin's and ask for brochures . . . Get them to tell you all about these highly-recommended Sunflight holidays! . . . Paulin Travel, 532 Broughton St, 382-9168.

Four-year-old Christopher Potter cuddles sister Teri-Lee

Brother a real lifesaver

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Christopher Potter saved his baby sister's life Thursday and everyone is telling him he's a hero.

The children's father, Wayne, had gone into the house when Teri-Lee, 23 months, toppled into the backyard pool.

Christopher, four, clad in his swimsuit, didn't panic. He rescued his sister by putting into practice the lifesaving techniques he had learned at swim classes.

"I had to grab on to her foot," he said. "I had to reach way down to get her hands. I held her to the side of the pool."

Then he hollered, by this time in tears, for his father, who came running from the house and pulled Teri-Lee from the pool.

By DR. FRANK MILLER

Dr. Frank Miller
The Wonderful World of ANIMALS

Dear Dr. Miller: I hatched Downy, my chick, from a one-egg incubator. I was there watching when he pecked his way out of the shell. I was just wondering how he could be strong enough to do that when he seemed so weak right after he was first born. — I.R.

Dear I.R.: Downy did it with the aid of the "hatching muscle". (M. complexus, a broad muscle connecting the back of the head to the upper neck). This muscle, which is extemely large at birth, helps the chick to drive its beak in a forceful upward (not forward) movement to break through the comparatively firm shell.

* * *

Dear Dr. Miller: In the several months I've had Bulgie, this cat has developed one very peculiar habit. Now it seems to be botheing him as much as me. He started out by simple sticking a hind foot in his ear.

Then he'd do it more and more often, and now he's actually scratched the ears with his hind feet and his poor ears are getting all sore. So of course he shakes them a lot. I wonder if I could keep him from doing this dumb thing by tying his hind feet together or something like that — S.S.

Dear S.S.: Indeed, hobbling has the advantage of restricting hind feet activity, and Bulgie would be exceptional if he could stick his hind foot in his ear under those circumstances. However, he'd hate hobbles. Besides, his earie habit has probably developed not because he's primarily peculiar, but because his ears have been bothering him all along. By far the most common cause for itching and irritation in a cat's ear canals is inflammation related to infestations of ear mites. These creepy little spider-related critters cause intense itching in the ear canals and can create more serious problems as well. Rather than being hobbled then, Bulgie had better be off to his doctor for an examination and, in all probability, ear mite treatment.

Dear Dr. Miller: Most of the time I keep Snowball, my white rat, in a great big cage in the garage. Lately there have been some droppings, not hers, around the cage. I find them in the morning. I think she has a wild rat boyfriend! Should I encourage this romance or would her babies grow up to be too dangerous? I've heard wild rats can be pretty tough. — E.L.

Dear E.L.: You're right. Wild rats can be dangerous in many respects. Even if Snowball survived the trauma of a romance with a wild one, and there's no assurance she would, there's also the strong possibility that a wild rat can carry many diseases dangerous to a tame rat and some diseases equally dangerous to humans. By all means, break up this romance before Snowball, one way or the other, succumbs to it.

Dear Abby:

I just read an article stating there is now conclusive evidence that secondhand cigarette smoke is damaging to the non-smoker.

I am a non-smoker, but my wife smokes enough for both of us. She has quit several times, but she's never been able to kick the habit for good. Her excuses are that when she quits smoking she gains weight, and smoking "relaxes" her. I've even heard her say, "Well, a person has to die of something," which is the most stupid excuse of all.

What worries me now is the fact that we have three small children who are the innocent victims of secondhand smoke in our home. Abby, I know my wife would quit if she could because she's really tried. You've probably heard from hundreds of heavy smokers who have quit for good. Which method is the most successful? Cold Turkey, cutting down gradually, hypnosis, stop-smoking clinics? Or are there other methods?

Please help me to help my wife without being a nag.

Freddy

Dear Freddy:

The best thing I've ever seen on how to quit smoking is the new booklet titled, Clearing the Air. It contains a variety of sensible approaches. What may seem silly to some may work a miracle for others. It may take a while for your wife to find the combination that will work for her, but if she really wants to quit smoking, she can.

The booklet is free to anyone who wants it and can be obtained by writing to: Clearing the Air, Box A, National Cancer Institute, Bethesda, Md. 20205.

Please let me hear from you in six months, Freddy. And if any of my readers send for this booklet, I would appreciate a progress report from you, too. Good luck.

Dear Abby:

My boyfriend and I are having a difference of opinion.

He says it is not possible for a girl to get pregnant the first time she goes to bed with a guy. I say it is.

Virgin (age 15)

Dear Virgin:

You are. Trust me . . . not him.

Dear Readers:

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Sunday, May 25, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be positive concerning facts, figures, contents of lease, contract or special agreement. Aquarius, Taurus, Scorpio persons play significant roles. Permit those close to you to express their views. Maintain discreet silence concerning your own specific plans.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be analytical, take nothing for granted — especially in emotional or romance areas. Emphasis on job, routine, key changes, fresh concepts — probably proferred by member of opposite sex. Gemini, Sagittarius natives figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis on relationships that "heat up," significant changes and a tendency to gamble. In matters of speculation, stick with number 6. Money is being "released" to you. Get to heart of matters — declare yourself — and intentions — to special member of opposite sex.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Define terms, see places and people in realistic light. Check with older individual who can lend benefit of experience. Get property appraisal. Emphasis on food, home, security and feeling that you are loved.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Burden is removed; you can pursue ideas — and ideals. Get off sidelines and into production. Capricorn, Cancer persons — and the number 8 — figure prominently. Good Moon aspect is indicative of favorable report on recent submission of book, article, suggestion or concept.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money is "on the way." Invoice is honored — it had been "missing." Aries, Libra persons figure in scenario. You will finish what you start — neighbors and colleagues applaud. What had been an ideal is close — you will be elated.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have grand opportunity to enter creative realm, to imprint style, to be independent of past obstacles — and to fall madly in love. Judgment is trusted by others — you also have right to be direct and confident. Leo, Aquarius natives play key roles.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You clear away confusion and mystery clouds. Secret is revealed. You learn who is hiding what — and for specific reason. Cancer, Leo, Aquarius persons figure in scenario. Hunch pays off — stick with number 11. Former teacher makes reappearance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis on results of recent investment, operating costs. Open lines of communication. Encourage one who does have your best interests at heart. Means show appreciation for genuine friendship. Gemini native figures prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are asked to represent special group or civic organization. Hold head high — accusation against you will be proven false. Do some revising and rebuilding — get on more solid base. Surprise money source dominates scenario.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Emphasis on renewing ties with former close associate. Money, joint efforts, special reports and investigations are featured. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently — and so does the number 6. Acquiesce to family request for item which beautifies home.

IF MAY 25 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, active, sensitive, psychic and have ability to master more than one language. People are intrigued by your combination of mystery, glamour and humor. Pisces, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. You gain valid opportunities to create, to win allies in June. Burden is removed, vitality makes comeback, optimism replaces gloom. You fall in love or rediscover loved one. In July, you make new starts in new directions — you meet someone who aids you in expressing ideas. Financial prospects are brighter than you might perceive.

Astrological Forecast for Monday, May 26, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis on depth, cost analysis, checking source material. Analyze reasons, reject superficial explanations, especially where financial transactions are concerned. Gemini, Virgo, Scorpio natives figure prominently. You could have an "occult" experience.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Obtain hint from Aries message — be aware of subtle nuances, legal requirements, rights and permissions. Family member makes important concession. You can restore harmony on domestic front. Money could be released from escrow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Maintain steady pace, avoid sensationalism — steer clear of schemes which promise something for nothing. One who shares work, basic interests does have something of value to offer. Perfect and streamline techniques. Pisces native plays key role.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accept challenge, more responsibility — special relationship is established. This is power-play — charisma surges to forefront, speculative ventures show profit. Stick with number 8. Another Cancer and a Capricorn figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Completion of schedule, obligation is indicated. Aries, Libra natives play key roles. Get property appraisal — learn what should be kept, what discarded. One who has your interests at heart will put you in contact with the "right" people.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Make inquiries, experiment, check sources, display humor, versatility and keen sense of perception. Short trip and a "favorite" relative could dominate your personal scenario. Leo, Aquarius natives figure prominently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emphasis on money, investments, hunches, gaining sense of where to go and whom to see. You are being pulled along different paths — at one and the same time. Cancer, Leo and Aquarius persons play significant roles. Cash windfall blows your way.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Cycle high — diversify, state needs, communicate, submit written material. Gemini, Sagittarius persons play key roles. The number 3 figures prominently. Judgment, intuition hit mark. You can successfully take initiative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Revise some material — check with special club, group, institution. Verify authenticity of material at hand. Scorpio, Aquarius persons figure prominently. Cycle is indicative of lost articles being located, secrets being revealed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take initiative where business, basic investment procedures enter picture. You have very clear vision of what should be done to make wishes come true. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons aid in paving way for creative changes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You get what you asked for — you can handle it. Added responsibility should not be cause for uncertainty. Family member will support efforts, aspirations. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives play significant roles.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Abstract ideas, concepts will come into sharp, clear focus. Accent on foreign lands and languages, bridging cultural gaps. Virgo and another Pisces figure prominently. Set your own pace, stand tall, understand that temper tantrum by loved one is not serious.

IF APRIL 26 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are stubborn, sexy, musical, capable of handling responsibility and running a business. You are attractive, versatile and have a temper that can resemble fireworks. Capricorn, Cancer persons play important roles in your life. In June, you embark upon adventure. There will be new contacts, exciting discoveries — and love. Vitality will make a comeback. Creative juices are activated. You seldom start something unless you also intend to finish it. You might appear gruff, but you are sentimental on the inside. You are romantic, perceptive, capable of organizing people and fighting for causes and principles.

Most houses shelter a pet

NEW YORK (AP) — Approximately 55 per cent of America's households support at least one pet, and many have more than one, the Pet Information Bureau estimates. Dogs and cats are still the favorites but recently birds, fish and small animals such as hamsters and gerbils have become popular.

Bedwetting: food allergies suspected

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Bedwetting is always a distressing problem, both to the child and to the parents. In most instances, however, enuresis, or bedwetting, spontaneously disappears as the child grows older.

Unfortunately, children are too often stigmatized, or self-stigmatized, by delayed toilet training. This is especially true when undue pressure is exerted upon them. In their anxiety, some parents will unwittingly resort to methods of shaming and embarrassing the child. This has a deep-seated psychological effect.

Others may pursue a physical cause for bedwetting, putting so much pressure on the child's doctor that they may insist on cystoscopy in order to rule out an existing organic defect. In some cases this must be done. It should however, be avoided whenever possible, especially when there is no obvious evidence of physical malfunction. Cystoscopy can be emotionally traumatizing.

The psychological aspects of the problem of bedwetting must be carefully evaluated. Simple tests, even for very young children, may point to the emotional stresses related to such delay in control of urination.

Recently, a great deal of attention has been concentrated on the possibility that some food allergies may be responsible for bedwetting. Dr. James C. Breneman has studied more than 500 children who had the problem of enuresis. He came up with the intriguing observation that cow's milk was the offending allergen in about 60 per cent of the cases he had studied. Chocolate, eggs, grains and citrus fruits were also significantly involved as allergens.

It was found that when the offending food was removed from the child's diet, bedwetting stopped almost at once. Dr. Breneman explains that "in allergic children, the bladder is the target organ. As its wall swells and becomes less elastic, the bladder becomes irritated and develops a proneness to spasm.

"These children are more likely to be fatigued because of their food allergy, and thus sleep deeply. They seem less motivated to get up during the night if there is a slight urge to empty the bladder."

Dr. Breneman's approach begins with giving the child nonallergenic food formulas. Then he reintroduces one food item at a time, until the offending food is definitely identified.

This is not a complicated approach to the problem of bedwetting and it certainly should be of interest to parents whose children have this problem.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him in care of the Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

Old Scottish firm a sewing tradition

I think I can safely say that every woman who sews in Canada today is familiar with the name of Coats and thinks immediately of sewing and crochet cottons; and many of you know it is an old established company in Scotland and known throughout the world.

Prior ot 1820 handsewing was worked with linen or silk thread, for it was Napoleon's blockade of Britain in 1806 which stopped the importing of silk and caused James Coats to turn to cotton and experiment and eventually manufacture a thread sufficiently strong enough to replace the linen and silk thread which had been used until that time.

But let's go back to 1802 to the town of Paisley in Scotland where James Coats had a thriving business having taught the weavers of that town to reproduce the beautiful and rare Canton Crepe shawls of China, but at greatly reduced prices. These shawls gradually became known as the "Paisley Shawls" and sold in all the fashionable shops of London, Glasgow and Edinburgh.

You can imagine the blow to James Coats business when he was unable to import any silk and especially to the weavers and workers of his factory, hence the need to invent an alternative thread and the eventual method of twisting two cotton yarns together.

In 1830 James Coats retired leaving his weaving business to his son William and the thread business to his sons James and Peter, and it is this partnership of J. & P. Coats, the same company which we know today.

In 1840 a younger brother Andrew was sent to the U.S. and by 1870 they built quite large mills at Pawtucket, Rhode Island.

Coats in Scotland were making several shipments to Canada as early as 1848 and regular shipments began in 1854. In 1871 it was decided to build a mill for spooling thread and by 1876 sewing thread was being manufactured.

The present Coats mill was erected in 1908 on land reclaimed from the St. Lawrence river and is still the headquarters of the company here in Canada.

Sewing thread has come a long way from it's first introduction way back in the year 1820, they now make specialized thread for blue jeans to boots, sweaters to seat belts, underwear to overcoats.

They are the leading and the world's largest thread manufacturers with mills in 27 countries. The mill in Paisley, which is still the largest, now produces in the neighbourhood of 100 million miles of thread each year! Enough to reach the moon and back about 200 times!

New fibres and finishes are constantly being discovered by Coats in their ongoing research to bring women who sew even better threads in the future.

Stress a pain in the mouth

NEW YORK (AP) — While stress may cause headaches, ulcers, heart attacks or other ailments, it sometimes first turns up as mouth and gum disease, a professor of dentistry says.

"People don't think of the mouth as connected to the body," said Dr. Howard Ward, assistant dean for clinical affairs at New York University College of Dentistry. "But the oral tissues respond to stress and even the anticipation of strees."

Stress can cause people to grind their teeth in their sleep, leading to jaw, neck or even head pain on arising. It may cause changes in the mouth membrane that can lead to tooth loss, he said.

Stress also alters the acid content of saliva in the mouth, Ward said, which can promote tooth decay and gum disease.

"The mouth is often a manifestation of similar degenerative problems elsewhere in the body," Ward said. "The same kind of (stressed) people are more likely to get strokes, heart attacks and ulcers."

Tooth grinding, known as bruxism, is usually involuntary. It can occur either day or night, but is most common at night.

Many people are unaware of bruxism until they awake with aching teeth or sore jaw muscles. But the pain can also be felt in the neck, cheek, head, shoulders or back, masking its origin, he said.

Bruxism sometimes causes "wear facets," which are shiny surfaces on the tops of teeth. A dentist who finds these can correct the problem by making a "night guard" which allows the jaw to strike against a flat plane of acrylic.

But grinding, clenching or clamping the teeth also can cause a thickening of the membrane which holds the tooth to the bone, Ward said.

"It thickens to resist stress. The tooth becomes loose but is retained in the mouth. Should there be inflammation due to plaque or bacterial toxin, the tooth can be jeopardized."

jack beastall

Newcomers to gardening are wondering where their compost box should be located and how it should be constructed. As far as placement is concerned, a lot will depend on the over-all garden layout, but there are some definite basic rules for construction which are wise to follow.

Perhaps the international home-and-garden magazines have given us a distorted approach to this age-old gardening practice, by stressing elaborate walls and screening for the compost-making area.

The impression is left that compost making is so degrading or revolting that no visitor may see. Or is it some form of witchcraft not to be performed in the open?

There is no reason to be ashamed of making good soil in which to grow one's plants, and there is no sound argument that the heap, or container, should be out of sight in some remote corner of the lot.

The truly efficient gardener will have more than one box, some preferring three or four small boxes in convenient locations. After all, it is not very brilliant to cut the front lawn, trundle the cuttings to the back corner of the lot and later wheel the compost up the front to dress the lawn and border.

Most gardens have a space about six feet long between shrubs or trees on a fence line where a neatly-made, well-painted box can be placed. One in the front garden, two in the back garden, and possibly a small container near the back steps for household wastes, can take a lot of drudgery out of compost making, because each box serves the immediate area.

Basically, a box is just four slatted sides with no top or bottom, since the best compost comes from heaps built right on the bare soil so that the micro-organisms can enter the heap. The base soil is lightly forked over before each new heap is started.

Most gardeners nail the boxes together, but I prefer four separate sides with six inches of the uprights projecting into the soil, and the corners fastened with lengths of old clothes line.

Boxes ot this type are easily removed when the original heap is working and has settled, and can then be set up close by to collect the material for another heap.

To decompose rapidly, the material requires air, water and heat. The right proportion of air is obtained when the sides of the box are made from old pieces of shiplap spaced about two inches apart. This spacing allows air circulation without too much cooking effect, and prevents the compost from becoming too soggy and too acid in reaction.

Covers are not used for the same reasons, although temporary covers of sacking or three-ply are placed on top during the heating-up period.

I have found these small take-apart boxes more convenient to use than a large fixed bin with a section for collecting enough material, another for the working heap and a third for compost ready for use.

Perhaps this is the place to explain how a simple compost heap is made and why certain prcedures are necessary; it is just one of many methods in common usage.

All plant wastes contain cellulose which is difficult to decompose. It is the reason why plants are not devoured by the millions of insects that are around, a sort of natural built-in protection.

This cellulose cannot be worked on by the organisms of decomposition until it has been broken down in some manner. That is the reason a twig from a tree can lie on the ground for several years before it decomposes and becomes a small patch of soil.

Heat will break down the cellulose in a few days so that the organisms can get to work. The same heat makes conditions ideal for the increase of some organisms, thus giving us just what we need to obtain compost in a hurry.

The required heat is not generated in a heap that is added to every few days. The entire heap must be built at one time and the temperature at the centre reach 80 to 83 degrees Celsius within 48 hours. When this takes place our compost heap is well away.

To build this kind of heap, the collected material is well shaken out and mixed together. A layer six to eight inches is spread loosely on the freshly forked-over soil. This layer is given a dusting of ammonia which is our heating agent. Use sulphate of ammonia, nitrate of ammonia, or the plain 6-8-6 general garden fertilizer.

Another layer the same depth goes on top. This layer is dusted with hydrated lime to prevent the heap from becoming too acid and destroying the organisms that are doing the work. If there is no soil on the roots of the material being used, a shovelful of the best soil in the garden is scattered over the dusting of lime to supply additional micro-organisms.

Next comes a soaking of water from the hose, then a repeat of the layers; fertilizer on one, lime and soil on the next, until the box is filled. The box should be at least three feet in height but four feet is better.

Don't stamp down the layer unless the material is very springy. Compacting excludes the necessary air circulation. The heap will break down much faster if all material is cut into short lengths, and the finished compost is much easier to take out and apply to the soil.

When the bin is filled and has received the final soaking with water, the temporary covering of sacking or three-ply goes on top to conserve the heat.

After about six days the heap will start to shrink, and in ten days will be about one-half its original height. This is the sign that the heap is working properly. The covers can now be removed and the heap watered as needed to sustain the decomposing process. As soon as the heap has cooled, in about three weeks, the take-apart box can be removed and set up again to collect more material for the next heap.

Materials for composting include eggshells, sea shells, coffee grounds, tea leaves, vegetable trimmings, weeds and discarded plants with soil still attached to the roots, lawn clippings well shaken out and mixed with other material, human and animal hair, dust from vacuum cleaner, torn and soaked paper and cardboard.

Brewery mash and spent hops are excellent if you can get them; old sacking; shredded cotton, woolen and pure silk materials; ashes from tobacco, cigarette butts, and dried tobacco dust, leaves, spoiled hay, grass and weeds from vacant lots, pet manures and feathers from chickens, turkeys or other birds.

One word of caution; never put cooked foods into a compost heap. Foods are cooked to prevent bacterial action, and the organisms in the compost heap cannot decompose them. When in a compost heap they attract animals and rodesnts. Fat of kinds, oils (cooking or petroleum), and plastic products are other items that will ruin the compost.

Netted whales a problem for fishermen

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — On a cold, wet spring day on Conception Bay, off the east coast of Newfoundland, observers from a sailboat spotted five humpback whales circling around a trapped companion.

The stricken whale, 17 metres long, had a net mooring wrapped around its tail, holding most of its body under water, and appeared in imminent danger of drowning.

It managed to get the blowhole at the top of its head to the surface for an instant to spout and draw in fresh air.

Then it broke free, whistled, leaped like a trout in visible joy and bore away at high speed.

The net was left in torn ruins.

Dr. Jon Lien, an animal behavior specialist at Memorial University's psychology department, says humpbacks and other whales caused about $2.5 million damage to Newfoundland's inshore fishery in 1979 in lost gear and down time.

Lien now is in the third year of a program to find ways to keep humpbacks away from fishing gear. The program has turned into a race against growing demands by fishermen for permission to shoot the humpbacks.

Some nets, such as cod traps, cost $8,000 and there is no whale-damage insurance.

Humpbacks, an endangered species who give birth only once every three years, are protected in local waters by a Canadian ban on whale-hunting.

After wintering in the Caribbean, between 2,000 and 3,000 humpbacks migrate to Newfoundland waters in spring. Some pass through the Gulf of Maine and others find their way to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Lien says several experimental devices have shown promise. The aim is to use something that will tell a whale a net or other fishing gear is in his way.

Such a device has to be visible or audible to a whale but must not scare away fish.

An underwater bell, made of three pieces of metal and costing about $2.50, appears so far to be most successful. The low-frequency sound it produces with wave action is of an irregular pattern and cannot be heard by cod.

Before the judge

Judge Fred Giles fined a 28-year-old Calgary pilot $2,500 after finding him guilty Friday in Victoria provincial court of operating an aircraft in a negligent and reckless manner.

Richard Stanley Radcliff was originally charged with one other offence under the Aeronautics Act, flying at an unsafe altitude in a built-up area of a city.

The charges arose from an incident Sept. 17, 1978, when a Cessna 337 piloted by Radcliff flew over the Gordon Head area.

Two witnesses testified during a two-day trial which began Thursday that Radcliff made three low passes over the area and one said the plane came so low he thought it was going to crash.

Radcliff had flown from Calgary to Victoria, performed a "touch and go" at the Pat Bay airport and headed south, where he flew over his parents' home at 4467 Tyndall.

Defence lawyer Michael Hutchison argued that his client had 370 hours in the air without incident prior to that occasion and that pilots practiced stalls, steep turns, and other aeronautical maneouvres in the same area.

Hutchison, who added he was a pilot himself, said Radcliff, in the exuberance of flight, delayed climbing but was not "buzzing or beating up" the area.

Giles agreed with crown counsel Digby Kier of Vancouver, stating it was a very serious offence and that Radcliff was in charge of a very dangerous piece of machinery.

Judge Harold Alder fined a 21-year-old Port Alice man $50 for performing an indecent act last Saturday night.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Keith Robert Mavin was part of a group of 37 persons ejected from the Mediaeval Inn, 1005 Broad.

The group congregated on the north side of a nearby parkade when Victoria police arrived and Mavin was seen waving his private parts in the direction of the restaurant, Laughton said.

Mavin denied the allegation and said he was only going to the washroom at the time.

Judge William Ostler levied a total of $800 in fines against 20-year-old Wayne Marcel Contois for driving while under suspension, driving without insurance, and driving a vehicle which was not displaying the proper licence plates.

Roberts was stopped by Sidney RCMP after he was spotted speeding on the Sancha Hall parking lot at about 11:40 p.m. Two breath test readings of .22 were eventually obtained, court was informed.

Downtown Duncan slipping?

DUNCAN — City council has come under attack for lack of action on downtown core rejuvenation.

Landlords and tenants of downtown businesses packed the basement of city hall to hear members of the Duncan Downtown Business Association and council members speak on the problem.

A show-of-hands vote showed the businessmen 100 per cent in favor of increased business taxes with the money earmarked to rejuvenate the city core.

Austerity slashes UVic program

Some segments of the University of Victoria's extension program are likely to be pulled back.

Director Dr. Glen Farrell says only half the funds needed for extension credit programs in the coming session can be covered by the operating grant provided by the Universities Council of B.C.

But Farrell said interior B.C. students enrolled in UVic credit programs through the David Thompson University Centre at Nelson will continue to receive services through the extension division.

And there will be full funding for credit-free programs.

"These funding decisions reflect a clear priority for David Thompson University Centre, which is fair enough," said Farrell.

"But other people in other areas are being penalized because we cannot do as much to provide requested educational services."

Areas where it will be necessary to hold the line or reduce service will be decided in consultation with program officers, he said.

There is a long-term commitment by UVic to a social work degree program in which 48 Okanagan students are enrolled at second year level.

This and other degree programs will continue to get priority but elective courses may suffer, Farrell said.

Commission gets lucky

The Juan de Fuca Parks and Recreation Commission last month received a surprise benefit from the provincial government's decision to peg property assessment to real value.

The federal government last month gave the commission about $40,000 more than it expected as an annual grant in lieu of taxes.

The surprise increase occurred because the provincial government's assessment policy raised the recreation centre's assessment value which the federal government uses to calculate the grants it pays.

Commission chairman Howard Drummond says the commission probably won't have much trouble deciding how to spend the windfall.

Law specialist joins UVic

A leading specialist in labor and administrative law will occupy a Lansdowne scholar's chair at the University of Victoria for the 1980-81 academic year.

He is Prof. Innis Christie, a member of the law faculty at Dalhousie University and, until recently, chairman of the Nova Scotia Labor Relations Board.

Educated at Dalhousie, Cambridge and Yale, Christie has taught at Dalhousie for the past eight years.

Saanich denies accusation of foot-dragging in lawsuit

Saanich municipal solicitor Chris Nation has denied statements by Capital Region District chairman James Campbell the municipality resisted CRD attempts to speed proceedings in the Tillicum shopping centre court case.

Campbell said last week Saanich refused to have the case heard summarily — that is, on legal points alone.

The statement is not true, Nation says in a report made public at an information meeting at municipal hall.

The CRD chairman told reporters last week if Saanich had not dragged its feet in the matter, the case could have been resolved before the end of June.

Now it appears a full trial will be ordered that could take several months or longer to complete.

"In fact, the truth is and the record shows that it is the other way around — the CRD has continually resisted Saanich's and Cal's (developer Cal Investments Ltd.) efforts to have the case heard summarily," Nation said.

From the beginning of the lawsuit, Saanich's representative in the case, lawyer Rodney Taylor, and Nation have asked in formal legal documents and private negotiations with CRD lawyer Don Farquhar to have the case resolved in a summary manner, the report states.

"The CRD on the other hand has only ever agreed to the case being heard summarily if Saanich and the developers made some extremely valuable concessions, both in terms of tactics and money.

"The CRD has never, through its lawyer, tried to persuade Saanich to have the case heard summarily although we have made such attempts to the CRD's lawyer," Nation said.

Campbell told the Times Thursday he did not at any time give instructions to oppose the summary process.

He said there is no evidence Saanich attempted to have the proceedings heard summarily, rather than by the time-consuming full-trial method of producing evidence and witnesses.

More using seatbelts

The use of seatbelts is on the increase in B.C., Highways Minister Alex Fraser said Friday.

He said a March survey conducted for the motor vehicles branch shows 63 per cent of drivers use seatbelts, up from 58 per cent during the last survey, and 55 per cent of passengers use them compared with 42 per cent previously.

A branch spokesman said more comfortable seatbelts and greater enforcement is the reason for increased use.

He said more than 3,000 people have been convicted for violations of the seatbelt law since the beginning of this year.

Use of seatbelts is mandatory in B.C.

Nursing staffs beefed at Vancouver hospitals

VANCOUVER (CP) — Staffs designated as essential have been beefed up at three Vancouver-area health institutions where government-employed nurses have conducted a strike without picket lines since May 16.

Following discussions with officials at the B.C. Labor Relations Board, 16 more registered and psychiatric nurses were assigned duties at Valleyview, Woodlands and Riverview hospitals.

Nurses' spokesman Jerry Miller said Friday that discussions about the need for increased staffing under the plan originally proposed by the nurses' and accepted by labor board officials began Wednesday morning at Valleyview.

The increased staffing met immediate complaints of operators of the institutions that the remaining staff and supervisors were being overworked and that it was virtually impossible to provide minimum care.

The additional nurses were assigned to wards of 70 to 90 patients. Previously only one nurse had been assigned to two of these wards.

Miller said that the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. and Registered Psychiatric Nurses Association of B.C. have taken a position from the beginning of the strike that additional nurses will be provided where necessary.

About 2,700 nurses went on strike after rejecting a non-binding settlement report by Mr. Justice Henry Hutcheon of the B.C. Supreme Court who acted as an industrial inquiry commissioner for the provincial government.

His report offered the government nurses a 25.6-per-cent increase in a two-year contract, saying the increase would provide roughly equivalent rates with general hospital nurses who have ratified a 44-per cent increase over 27 months.

But the government nurses, who work shorter hours than hospital nurses, said the recommendations shortchanged them.

BCBC chief switches to realty firm

The president of the B.C. Buildings Corp., for three years has resigned to take a senior management job with Cadillac Fairview, a major real estate firm.

A new president is to be named soon, corporation chairman Walter Badun said.

PEPIN

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin said Friday he is sympathetic to the idea of re-establishing an ocean-going fleet for Canada.

But he added that he hasn't been in his portfolio long enough to study all the pros and cons of a gradual buildup of a merchant marine under the Canadian flag to move the country's exports and imports.

Canada has been without a deep-sea fleet since the 1950s.

Pepin spoke at the closing session of the third annual marine conference which has been preoccupied with a deep-sea fleet.

During the two-day conference, several delegates complained about lack of progress in convincing the government of the need for such a fleet. Canada now is almost totally dependent on ships from other countries on overseas routes and the cost in balance of payments is estimated at between $3 billion and $4 billion.

Pepin told delegates he could understand their frustration at not getting a firm answer, but pointed out that there have been three transport ministers in office since they first began their annual sessions in 1978.

Pepin said it is too early for him to say what priority the government could give to a deep-sea fleet and whether the money was available for the tax benefits ship-owners needed to provide it.

He also noted that delegates had presented a long list of benefits they believed were needed and said he regarded them as a shopping list rather than firm requests.

No backpedalling for Supercycle in face of skeptics

By BRUCE LEVETT

TORONTO (CP) — Supercycle says he's genuinely sorry for the uproar he caused, but the 80-year-old from Vancouver is sticking to his story that he rode 6,067 kilometres in a record-breaking 15 days.

Harry Crawshaw is a tough but personable pensioner who captured the nickname Supercycle and the imagination of geriatrics everywhere with his claim that he knocked four days off the Vancouver-to-Halifax bicycle record.

"I can quite understand the skepticism," he said by telephone from Salvation Army headquarters in St. John's, Nfld. Crawshaw is a lay member.

"I wanted to break the record, but I surprised even myself," he said.

Crawshaw said "it just happened" that he went so fast — he claims he rode 73 hours straight at one stretch "to keep from freezing to death."

"I hope I haven't hurt anyone's feelings."

Well, there'll be no record in it, officially, says the Canadian Cycling Association, ruling body for the sport. You don't just climb onto the saddle and ride off into the sunset.

Don Sutherland, CCA technical director, says that while Crawshaw hasn't made an official claim on the record, "any such application would be turned down instantly."

"In the first place, for an attempt on a record, you need a CCA racing licence. Then there are check points to be set up — the logistics of an official record run are staggering."

Sutherland said in a telephone interview from his headquarters in Vanier, Que., that he put new batteries into his calculator and did some basic math.

"The official distance is 6,067 kilometres. He claims he did it in 15 days, which means 404 kilometres a day. If he were to have pedalled 24 hours a day, he could average 16 kilometres an hour. Even going 18 hours a day, the average would have to have been 22 kilometres an hour. That's a hell of a speed to maintain."

The controversy erupted when Supercycle spoke to reporters in Halifax, setting off retorts by unbelievers that nobody, especially an 80-year-old, could go that fast.

Officially, the record is held by Wayne Phillips, also of Vancouver, who did the distance in 19 days, 22 hours, 57 minutes in 1977 at the age of 23.

Crawshaw sticking to story

"He posted check cards at every stopping place and got his route cards authenticated all along the way," Sutherland said.

"Phillips is an experienced racing and touring cyclist and he was riding a light-weight racing cycle."

The 80-year-old, on the other hand, was pushing a heavy 10-speed and was encumbered with tack such as sleeping bag.

The Vancouver Province, cocking an incredulous brow at Crawshaw's claim, quotes Supercycle's son Larry, a Chilliwick, B.C., farmer, as saying that, anyway, his dad isn't 80, but closer to 77.

"Oh, Larry wouldn't know," Crawshaw replies. "Ask my older son Murray in Winnipeg."

Crawshaw feels his claim is genuine in that "all the truck drivers alone the way honked and passed the word along" as they went by.

Some of them stopped, he says, "and slipped me $5 and $2."

"I sure appreciated it."

He says he spent only two nights in hotels and "the newspaper at Edmunston, N.B., put me up free in a motel — wasn't that nice of them?"

Among the unbelievers is Ken Smith of the National Sports and Recreation Centre in Vanier, who says "impossible — literally impossible."

U.S. change in tax law helps city conventions

Victoria's convention business will increase 20 per cent as a direct result of a decision by the U.S. Friday to allow income tax deductions for attending meetings in Canada, Pan Pacific Society spokesman Arne Lane said today.

He said the timing of the announcement was ideal because it will help Victoria to promote its new convention centre in the U.S. as well as Canada.

"We can expect to get a signficant number of conventions from below the border because Americans had always considered Victoria to be an ideal meeting place," Lane said.

The concession was part of a new tax package announced in Ottawa Friday.

Ideal meeting place

In 1978 the U.S. government brought in tough regulations ending tax breaks for attending conventions outside the country. The move was designed to promote convention business within that country.

Normally Canada would have been exempted from the regulations because of reciprocal trade agreements but the issue became linked with a separate dispute.

Canada had just passed laws disallowing tax deductions for Canadians advertising on U.S. border TV stations.

Stations like KVOS-TV in Bellingham suffered a sharp drop in revenues and lodged formal protests. Americans also protested Canadian tax changes ending tax deductions for advertising in Canadian editions of Time and Readers' Digest.

In retaliation for these moves, the U.S. refused to exempt Canada from the new regulation on foreign conventions.

The Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce and the former tourism minister Grace McCarthy vigorously protested the U.S. move, Lane said.

Victoria hotels noticed an immediate drop in business in the order of 20 per cent.

This business can be expected to return now that the rules are going to be changed and U.S. delegates will be able to get a tax deduction on convention expenses here.

The change has been approved in principle by Canadian and American negotiators as part of a package deal. It will have to be confirmed by legislation on both sides of the border but passage is expected without difficulty.

The new law should be in place in 1981, months before the opening of the new Victoria convention centre — expected in February, 1982.

Lane said the Pan Pacific group will soon be hiring a general manager and he or she will be able to market the Victoria convention centre actively in both countries and not just in Canada.

The package also will end some tax advantages U.S. investors enjoyed in the Canadian resources markets.

The Canadian finance department did not announce what Canada gave up to gain the concessions.

The new tax treaty, which replaces one signed in 1942, reduces — for the first time — the withholding tax on non-residents to 10 per cent from 15 per cent on direct dividends, patent royalties and technical know-how payments.

The 15 per cent withholding tax on portfolio dividends, interest and period pension payments stays the same.

The resource tax change ensures that any profit or income from real property, including natural resource royalties, will be fully taxed in Canada.

In addition, gains arising from the sale of the property, including business assets of a permanent establishment, will be fully taxed in Canada.

Under the old treaty, a maximum tax of 15 per cent applied to non-residents on resource royalties while Canadian companies paid a corporate tax rate of 46 per cent before special allowances and incentives. Non-residents now are subject to the same 46-per-cent rate as Canadians.

In addition, when non-residents sell their resource royalty interests and properties, they will be subject to the 46-per-cent rate instead of paying no tax.

Finance officials say the extra revenue generated from the resource tax changes could be worth "hundreds of millions of dollars" in the future as the price of oil — and the government's share of tax — rises closer to world prices.

Centre on the way

The tax treaty also changes the rules for Canadians living outside Canada who receive pension and annuity income.

Under the new agreement, those receiving regular pension payments will be subject to a maximum tax of 15 per cent instead of not paying any tax. Lump-sum payments would be subject to a 25 per cent tax.

Those with annuity payments will be subject to similar rules.

Right button to control who can hunt

British Columbia hunters will soon have to rely on a computer for permission to use their rifles, British Columbia Environment Minister Stephen Rogers said Friday.

And until the right button is pushed, nobody can pull a trigger, he said.

"Applications for limited-entry hunting licences have increased in recent years to such an extent that the program will have to be controlled by a computer system," Rogers said.

He said hunting applications had increased from an initial 163 to over 12,000 last year, since the limited-entry program was introduced in 1974.

Limited-entry hunting is used by ministry wildlife branch officials to regulate the number of animals killed per season in each of the seven species covered by the program.

By controlling hunting by area and placing the information in a computer, the branch can determine the number of animals that can be killed the following season without endangering the species.

Applicants will compete for licences to hunt one or more species in a computer-controlled, lottery-type draw, Rogers said.

Application cards and information packages on the new system will be available at ministry offices by the end of the month.

Rogers said each application will cost $2 to a maximum of seven applications per hunter.

Laws changing on import meat

CRANBROOK (CP) — New laws are being drafted governing the importation of meat, federal Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan said Friday.

The minister told the annual meeting of the B.C. Cattlemen's Association that the legislation must be flexible enough to meet changing market demands. Imports should increase as domestic production declines and decrease under reverse conditions.

He said other factors such as the price of beef and anything affecting Canada's trade in cattle and beef must be dealt with. The minister also said the legislation will take into account the fact that B.C. cattlemen are dealing in a North American-scale market.

QUESTION: What are some clues to suicide?
ANSWER: People who are thinking of suicide usually make direct statements about their plans. Threats of suicide need to be taken seriously and talked about openly. Other clues to be aware of include sudden changes in behavior, previous suicide attempts and getting personal affairs in order. For further help and information, NEED Crisis Line volunteers are available to hear your concerns.

QUESTION: What seems to be the busiest time for a crisis line?
ANSWER: Our busiest time at NEED is between the hours of 4 p.m. and midnight. We have trained volunteers around the clock to respond to callers, and we invite people to call anytime.

MUSIC TO SUIT EVERY TASTE echoed over Inner Harbor area Friday night on eve of Swiftsure sailing classic. Brad Stover, trumpet player with the Sumner High school jazz band from Tacoma, Wash., got in some hot licks while Seattle's Bob Moss, from yacht Night Runner, did his thing on the bagpipes. Police said huge crowds turned out to see fleet of boats in harbor and enjoy serenades.

By LON WOOD

"Victoria is just not a serious message town," said the unidentified impressario.

Cultural overseer Allan Purdy, too, is on record with his prediction that 80s entertainment will become even fluffier and frothier.

Looking back, there have been some messages — several local productions of George Ryga's sketch of native Indian tragedy in The Ecstasy of Rita Joe; and Creeps, staged by Belfry Theatre to prick our collective conscience with the plight of the mentally and physically broken.

"Yes, its a rarity that we get a show with a definite message — how things are outside our world, or appear from a minority perspective," said our nameless friend — who wishes to continue without hassle importing endless evenings of froth — albeit entertaining froth — for the local masses.

But if the Victoria Black People's Society succeeds in its latest venture, a few hundred area types will turn out to a serious play next week.

The society, in conjunction with Victoria International Development Educaton Association, is sponsoring Harold Kimmler's play The Cell, at the Belfry Theatre, Thursday to Sunday inclusive.

The Vancouver-based Sepia Players present this bold performance which capsulizes South Africa's Apartheid policy in a prison cell containing two imprisoned white South Africans.

"Kimmler's play is art. The kind of tight, claustrophobic art that . . . recognizes that the Afrikaaner's definition of 'separateness' of the races is not only logically justified in South Africa, but for political, tactical, economic and racial reasons, it has a good deal of closet acceptance in many countries which publicly oppose it," said Sun critic Wayne Edmonstone. "The Cell provides thought-provoking and at times compelling theatre."

"South Africa is so damned far away," said Johnson during a recent Victoria visit. "In Vancouver, Victoria and in any part of the country, people are not very concerned about anything until it happens to them. The problems in South Africa seem like problems that do not belong here."

The oppressed people in South Africa can't be hurt any more than they are now, says Johnson, and any awareness developed towards helping them obtain justice in their own country is of value.

"Our connection with South Africa is economic and South Africa cannot perpetuate its existing system without the support of the industrialized countries of the west.

"Officially — including Canada — we have a schizophrenic position. The governments of most of the world condemn Apartheid and condemn the horrors inflicted on non-white people — yet those horrors are able to continue sheerly because they are supported by economics."

The play's Vancouver run was two weeks.

"Unfortunately that's hardly enough time. It deserves to be shown much more. And because it does make people aware, it should be seen by as many people we can get to come out and see it," said Johnson. "I suspect there's probably only one function we can have by doing the play. Making people realize there is a problem. What they do about it is their own business. All we can do is bring the problem to the surface.

"But one thing of extremely worthwhile note: There has never once been a reaction of indifference to this play. It's guaranteed that you will not be indifferent."

The play provides an alternative for people interested in theatre generally, and depending on local successes, Sepia Players is hoping to do a cross-country tour.

"We're obviously making some headway or we wouldn't be in Victoria," says Johnson, "but we would like to see it continue. It deserves the largest audience it can get."

Hinds and Johnson portray the two sides of the Apartheid situation. By their actions the entire picture unfolds — evolving from the difference between the two men. One man has complete power over the other and as is the case most of the time, the power is totally abused.

Kimmler the author, however, is an enigma — very likely living somewhat underground for, as Edmonstone writes: "He is a dangerous man to the people who run his country."

King came across The Cell while browsing through a book of one-act plays at the Vancouver Public Library.

"There are people who have tried to find out more about the author. . . nothing can be found out," said Johnson. "It's such a great mystery. It makes you wonder. Is the man alive? If so, where is he?"

Showtimes 8:30 each night; tickets $5 advance at the Belfry, McPherson and Hillside; $6 at the door.

Made in the U.S. molded in Canada

By ISSAC WILLIAMS

What is the biggest problem facing the development of Canadian music? Is it some inherited inferiority complex that says our music is always going to be second rate? Or is Canada just too affluent and true artists need to starve to be creative? Both answers have some validity but the strongest deterent to the Canadian musical identity lies just across the border. The U.S.A. — more specifically, the American market. It's just too close for most Canadian musicians to resist.

The problem is compounded by the Canadian music industry which seems to exist soley to develop acts that they can sell in the U.S.

What they like in the south at the moment (Boston, Styx, Lynyrd, Steve Miller) is the kind of music that Canadian record companies look for in new bands. It is not surprising that most of Canada's bands sound second rate, they are encouraged at all levels (manager, promoter, record reps) to copy an America sound.

An excellent example of this kind of sellout is the newest album by Pat Travers Crash and Burn. He's going to be in Victoria June 1, so anything I have to say you can check out yourself.

Travers is an Ottawa-born guitarist who has spent the last five years searching for an audience. He started playing in England where he developed a large concert following and was being billed as another Rory Gallagher, a hard working musician.

His R&B boogie music soon fell from favor with the arrival of Johnny Rotten and the early punk bands and Travers left England for the states. There, he has carefully molded his music to fit the conservative American radio tastes and Crash and Burn, his sixth album, is expected to finally break him into the top of the U.S. charts.

TRAVERS
. . . here June 1

Hooray for hard work, you say? A raspberry would better suit recognition of carbon copy sound. Travers has molded himself into so many corners that I am sure he doesn't know what his is doing anymore.

Crash and Burn plays like a K-Tel Hits of American Radio, 1976-1979. The highlight of the album is just how well Travers has managed to copy the sounds he is after. The opening title cut is a very reasonable facsimile of Steve Miller's big seller Fly Like An Eagle, complete with spacey organ. Lynyrd Skynyrd, at onetime the biggest box office attraction in America, appear on the next two cuts to be followed by the world's first supergroup, The Cream. Traver's singing on Born Under A Bad Sign is a perfect copy of Jack Bruce and I know the FM stations will just love playing the song. Side two of the album contains milder, afternoon radio style, music. The most obvious influence is Robin Trower. This seems the direction that Travers is heading for — to replace Trower on the radio and in album charts.

Travers' decision to copy his way to riches would not be so tragic if he was not capable of creating his own style. His earlier albums, however, show that Travers did have a style and even more, could write some fine songs.

His second album Makin' Magic contains some excellent songs and playing and left the promise of much more to come. Somewhere Travers took the path of least resistance and has turned out product for the radio and the pocketbook. Within this context, Crash And Burn does have value. For someone who likes Skynyrd, Miller or Trower in small doses, it is great. Four minutes of each is enough for me.

The team has won rave reviews for all their dual shows: The Apple Tree, Oh, Coward, Non-Stop Britain, Noel Coward and Cole Porter and their present show, Dinah Christie and Tom Kneebone — Together.

Sculptor Charles LePage is showing recent work in an exhibition at Art Mosaic Gallery, 910 Government St., in Harbour Square.

The exhibition opened Friday and will be continued through May 31.

Some of the soapstone sculptures are in the style of Henry Moore; abstract and free form pieces creatively using positive and negative space.

When he works in ivory he fashions realistic pieces reflecting nature in the form of mushrooms, fish and flowers.

Meticulous attention to detail is carried out in, for example, the pistil of a flower delicately created in 14k gold.

A grant from the Leon and Thea Koerner Foundation announced this week, will further augment the music library resources for Victoria Conservatory of Music.

The Conservatory's move to its new location on Academy Close has made possible the considerable expansion of much needed library space for its constantly increasing collection of music scores and reference materials.

Much of the collection has been purchased through previous assistance from the Koerner Foundation.

Response to the recent $25,000 challenge issued by an anonymous business man on behalf of Bastion Theatre's fund drive, has been immediate and encouraging according to board president Clare Copeland.

Among the first to respond were University of Victoria president Dr. Howard Petch and Mrs. Petch. They have pledged to lead the way in matching the challenge donation which has "impressed and intrigued" them. Altogether some $10,000 has come in since the offer was made public a week ago.

Another kind of response has been announced by UVic's drama department chairperson, Dr. Barbara McIntyre and director of theatre, Carl Hare.

They have confirmed that the Bastion fund campaign will be the recipient of the proceeds of two benefit performances to be given by the University drama department this summer.

The first will take place on July 7 during the Pheonix Summer Theatre season, and the second during the fall term.

Jack Hodgins, winner of the 1980 Governor General's Award for fiction, will be reading from his work as part of the Open Space reading series, Thursday at 8 p.m.

Sponsored by Canada Council and Open Space Gallery, the reading is free to the public.

* * *

A different kind of summer activity is announced by Kaleidoscope Theatre. "Put Yourself on Stage This Summer" proclaims a brochure entitled Theatrescope '80.

Outlined are three courses for those who might have been hankering to get theatrically involved but weren't sure how to go about it.

There is a junior course for nine to 11 year-olds, an intermediate for the 12 to 14s and a senior course for mid to late teens up to 18.

There are two three-week sessions for juniors and intermediates and one six-week session for the older group. There will be a limited enrolment of 20 students per course and all participants are promised involvement in a formal theatre presentation.

Staff instructors are Paul Liittich, one of the most talented and best known drama teachers on the west coast; Barb Poggemiller and Lorie Charters, both well known performers and directors of workshops and creative drama classes.

Tai Babilonia and Randy Gardner never got their chance to perform their ice-skating routine at Lake Placid in the Winter Olympics. Gardner pulled a groin muscle and had to withdraw. But now Bob Hope is coming to the rescue. He has signed them up for his NBC special next Wednesday.

Bob Green says he loves Anita Bryant and wants her back. But Anita, strong-principled advocate of God and family, has filed for divorce from her husband-manager of nearly 20 years.

Eight persons were injured in fights and several others were escorted from Charlotte Motor Speedway in Charlotte, N.C. during a Waylon Jennings concert. About 25,000 people bought tickets for Wednesday's qualifying for Sunday's World 600 stock car race, and the ticket entitled them to attend a concert by Jennings that evening. The concert, set for two hours, ended after only one.

Ringo Starr . . . bummed out on drums

Bandleader Benny Goodman says it wasn't until he talked to his lawyer that he learned just why the Connecticut Bar Association wanted him at its annual meeting. The "King of Swing" showed up to receive the association's public service award. Goodman told the 600 judges and lawyers that he was flattered to join the ranks of recipients including composer Richard Rodgers and singer Marian Anderson. "I thank you for linking my name with theirs," he said.

Film director Roman Polanski is in Israel on a 10-day visit to examine the possibility of filming his new movie The Pirates there.

Beatle Ringo Starr says he is turning in his drum sticks to concentrate on acting. "It's crazy, but I still have to fight this idea that I'm just a drummer. I haven't recorded an album for nearly two years now. I see my future in acting." Starr has appeared in the films The Magic Christian and That'll Be The Day. He has just completed the movie, Caveman.

Jazz trumpeter John Birks "Dizzy" Gillespie says his autobiography hit a sour note with wife Lorraine. She's leaving him after 40 years of marriage, he said. "She didn't like my autobiographical book, To Be or Not To Bop: Memoirs."

Tapes make show

In connection with a show coming to Open Space Gallery, 510 Fort, next week, an outstanding Canadian video artist, Kate Craig, will be presenting some of her video tapes at the Gallery, Sunday at 8 p.m.

Included in the showing will be her most recent tape, Delicate Issue, which was a first Category Award winner at the 1979 Canadian Video Open.

The show with which she is associated is entitled Art and Correspondence from the Western Front, and it involves, besides Craig, four other west coast artists — Glenn Lewis, Eric Metcalfe, Michael Morris and Vincent Trasov. It opens Tuesday and will continue through June 21.

Craig, Victoria-born, is a founding member and director of the Vancouver-based Western Front Society. She has been the director of Video there since 1976 and in collaboration with the other Western Front directors, has developed a unqiue situation where artists are invited to produce new video works.

Apart from her own work, Craig's major concern with the artists' community is one of communications to facilitate the exchange of information, particularly in the field of video art.

Jerzy joins acting set in 'Reds'

By RODERICK MANN
Los Angeles Times

CANNES — Jerzy Kosinsky, the Polish-born author, flew into Cannes this week to attend the showing of Being There, one of four U.S. entries competing with 18 other movies for a Gold Palm award in the 33rd annual Cannes Film Festival.

The author joined the parade of celebrities and celebrity-watchers who annually flock to the world's oldest and most prestigious event of its kind. The walk from the stately Carlton Hotel to the Palais des Festival is daily traversed by hopeful starlets, genuine stars, photographers, producers and directors seeking deals, seeing films, or seeking merely to be seen. More than 500 films from around the world will be screened.

Kosinsky was to stay just two days, and then leave for Spain where he is to make his acting debut in Warren Beatty's new movie, Reds.

When Paramount called and said how much it was offering him to be in the film he said he realized the enormous difference between the way Hollywood treats actors and the way it treats writers. "I couldn't believe the figure they mentioned. In fact, I thought they must be talking Spanish currency. 'How much is that in dollars?' I asked."

It's a great deal of money. In fact, for his work in the Beatty picture, which is about the life and times of John Reed and Louise Bryant, Kosinski will actually make more than he did from any of his early books.

"And what they didn't know," he said, "and I don't mind saying it now, is that I would have done the role for nothing, just for the experience because for me to act in a picture for anything other than experience, which I can later use, would be pointless."

The film will also give him the opportunity to do something he has long wanted to do — get even with his old friend Beatty.

"Warren offered me a film role before," he said. "It was in McCabe and Mrs. Miller, but I was not interested. Then six months ago, he called again and asked if I would be interested in playing the role of Zinoview, the Russian who was second only to Lenin. I told him I was busy with my new novel Autofocus. He said: 'This will be a great experience for you. It will give you the chance to take a different look at yourself, which can be interesting. You ski and play polo — what's wrong with trying to act as well?' Well, he had a point.

"Obviously, he does not want me for my acting ability, which has yet to be proven. It seems, however, that he thinks I have a certain temperamental quality which will work well in the film, which has mostly American actors like himself, Diane Keaton and Jack Nicholson. I am the complete opposite of Warren, and that will make the fact that we are protagonists in the story more interesting.

"In the story, I like him in the beginning, and we get along, but gradually that changes. And I must tell you that in real life I feel the same about Warren. Part of me likes him, for he is bright and charming and extremely clever and really good at what he does. But there is another part of me that dislikes him intensely for these very same qualities. After all, why should I at my age have gone through so many years of being kicked around and looking the way I do when he's had no such problems? Why should women turn to look at him and not at me? What the heck is this? Now, at last, I can vent some of my hostility at him in the film. How I shall enjoy it," he said, laughing.

Kosinski thinks that the Beatty film will surprise people.

"For one thing," he said, "it is a mature and complex love story of a kind not seen before on North American screens. By comparison, everything we have seen before will seem very conventional.

"Really," he said, "Warren is extraordinary. For this film he has learned to speak very good Russian. I took a friend of mine from Paris, a Russian emigre, to meet him. They spoke Russian together. Afterwards my friend asked me how long he had been speaking it. I told him he had just learned it for this picture. He was amazed."

Kosinski, who has been much courted here since his arrival, and given little chance to rest, is writing his new book, Autofocus, both as a novel and a screenplay. Dustin Hoffman, an old friend, has already expressed interest in it and is negotiating at the moment with Columbia.

Kosinki is, clearly, much cheered by the success of Being There, a film, it seems, for which he has nothing but praise.

YOUNG LOVE flourishes in the midst of a wildly improbable and zany household in Kauffman and Hart's classic comedy, You Can't Take It With You. The bemused couple are played by Louise McIntosh and Tom Walters in Victoria Theatre Guild's wind-up production of the season. The play, directed by well known Victoria comedy actor Jack Droy, opens Thursday at Langham Court Theatre and will continue there through June 7. Several newcomers to the Guild stage will make their debuts in the play. Guild patrons are asked to note the new curtain time of 8 p.m.

Longton at UVic analog console

By AUDREY JOHNSON

It's strange country for a person trained exclusively along conventional music lines.

It's even stranger country if your understanding of how electricity behaves is limited to knowing that if you plug the toaster, the coffee pot and the blender into the same circuit you'll probably blow it.

That makes it all the more unnerving to learn from Michael Longton, assistant professor in the University of Victoria electronic music lab, that it all began way back in the dark '50s.

For two hours recently I became a student immersed in a world of sounds, both strange and familiar, winking lights, soft clicks and gurgles. It began with confusion and ended, thanks to my excellent instructor, with a little of the light flickering in my brain and a consuming (but unspoken) desire to try my hand at composing on the analog synthesizer.

The analog looks something like the control console of a modern stage lighting board — a bewildering array of knobs, receptacles, switches, meters and light points. From a hank of many colored cords hanging nearby, Longton takes three or four and plugs them into various receptacles, then adjusts knobs to produce a delicate pattern of undulating tones from the rooms four speakers. Another knob is turned, a plug is altered and the timbre changes completely to a more nasal, or shriller, or more vibrato sound.

A facsimile of part of a piano keyboard at the base of the instrument might fool you into thinking it was merely printed there for symbolical decoration. Not so. The merest feather touch on any 'key' accordingly alters the pitch.

The analog deals with blocks of sound which the manipulating composer processes according to his fancy; he adds decay, timbre, harmonics, alters tempo and of course, enlarges or reduces volume.

We move on to something much newer — a digital synthesizer entitled 'Synclavier'. This one has a genuine keyboard although it is not connected to rods and hammers or tubes and valves. Whatever you do on this keyboard goes into a miniature computer sitting just above it.

The most familiar thing in the room — aside from the keyboards — is a small video display unit similar to the kind we newshounds now punch our stories into.

The fact that you can compose music directly through this unit proved to be one of the more unassimilable facts of life in the electronic lab.

A numbers game it may be, but what comes out of the speakers is certainly music.

Michael Longton has a slightly amused paternalism toward his "mass of spaghetti" (the analog) and the digital synthesizer. Like a wise and tolerant parent he accepts them for what they are, admires their attributes and adventurous qualities, does not expect more from them than is in keeping with their abilities. He scorns the sci-fi concept of a computer take-over.

The computer has to be programmed he points out and it's only the human musical brain that can do the programming — "computers are really quite stupid."

As an example of the digital's capacity, he brings a Bach volume to the keyboard and plays slowly, the opening subject of a fugue; he waits a few seconds and then the computer starts to play it back. At the appointed moment on the keyboard he brings in the second subject and the counterpoint of parts thickens, the sound quality much like a harpsichord. He turns a knob and the tempo quickens to an allegro.

But Longton says he considers it pointless to synthesize conventional instruments which, as themselves, are naturally better.

"This whole set-up is an instrument," he says, gesturing along the board. "There are many characteristic aspects for a composer in an electronic lab. Timbre, for instance, has more importance in electronic music. You can hear a block of timbres transform themselves as you work.

"It is possible to 'travel' a sound, using the four speakers in the corners of the room, around a compass's 360-degree circle. Then again an element of surprise is inherent in producing electronic music."

It is extremely useful in writing chamber music, for instance, says Longton. "You can try out what you are writing on the synthesizer, one voice at a time and then put them together and hear clearly what you are achieving." He speaks from experience as one who from time to time tries out his conventional work on the new medium.

The conventional composer, says Longton, thinks in terms of a melodic or rhythmic idea and then builds it up.

"The electronic composer is more analagous to a sculptor who starts with a block of stone or a mass of clay and begins subtracting — carving away what he doesn't want."

What sort of concept does the composer have when he confronts the electronic instrument?

"He's going to think in terms of sound shapes and density of tone," says Longton. "The student coming into the lab has to have an understanding of the character of sound, have a knowledge of acoustics and of 'processing'. And he must know the basic techniques of recording and splicing tape."

It's pretty difficult, Longton agrees. "One would have to make a written record of all the blocks of sound and settings you had used in a complicated composition. In a simple one you'd probably be able to remember.

However you can record on tape as you go along and complete your work by editing, splicing and mixing tapes until you have a satisfactory composition.

With the digital synthesizer of course, compositions are stored in the computer.

"We move all this out of here onto the stage for concerts," he says, indicating the equipment. "But of course electronic music is not necessarily to be heard in a concert performance, but in a space where people move about and through it. We've done quite a bit at the Victoria Art Gallery and also at Open Space."

The amount I was able to absorb on the subject in the space of a couple of hours is inevitably minimal.

Among the things now known, since visiting the lab: there is a 'sine wave'; it's a voluptuous curve described by 60-volt AC current as it flows into my coffee pot or toaster. It can be converted into sound and its curves can be angled to create a different sound. "Every time you change the shape of the wave you get a different timbre in the sound," Longton explains.?

And that's just approximately and incompletely, the magic of electronics as applied to the art of music.

One thing is certain. Next time there is an electronic program in the vicinity I'll be there with my ear to the crack that has been opened for me, eager to have it open a little further.

"LA CAGE AUX FOLLES" is not only outrageous but also outrageously funny. Nominated for 3 Academy Awards this year. We had been pondering as to running this film on a midnite series due to sub-titles. However, we feel "LA CAGE AUX FOLLES" is a very entertaining and humourous flic which most of our regular midnite patrons will enjoy. Seattle has worked its way out of hard times

By PHILIP HAGER
Los Angeles Times

SEATTLE — The signs of prosperity here are unmistakeable.

Gleaming office buildings reach for the sky. Jackhammers clatter at construction projects. Downtown hotels are packed, their rates moving steadily toward the $100-a-night plateau found in the biggest cities.

The contrast is stark from a decade ago, when, during the "Boeing depression," Seattle's unemployment rose to 15 per cent and thousands of out-of-work aerospace employees were standing in food lines and scrambling for jobs.

Now the economy is on a sounder foundation. Business is booming at Boeing. More important, the economy is more diversified — and thus less dependent on the giant aerospace firm. The mood here is one of cautious optimism.

"Undoubtedly, the question of how Boeing is doing will always be a very real one after what we went through before," says economist Dennis S. Fusco, vice president of Seattle First National Bank. "But we don't expect a repeat of what happened then. The circumstances are different now."

Nonetheless, authorities readily concede the city is far from immune from the national recession that finally has arrived. Layoffs, particularly in the wood products industry, and the exhausting squeeze of inflation are of increasing concern. In fact, some here see chillingly familiar reminders of the hard times of the early '70s.

Monorail became a familiar landmark

In the basement of the Episcopal Diocese headquarters a volunteer food bank program for the needy is in high gear. Its director, Ruth Sterling, brightens perceptibly as she takes a phone call from a businessman donating 400 cases of Yogurt.

"That's terrific — and don't worry about the flavors," she tells the caller. "We can use it for everyone from babies to senior citizens."

Sterling, a veteran of the now-defunct Neighbors in Need food distribution program that operated during Seattle's depression, reports a sharp increase in the number of persons seeking aid from the new program.

In five months her organization has supplied $209,000 worth of donated food — canned goods, potatoes, fish, whatever is available.

A year ago, 22,000 were being assisted. For last month, the number was over 40,000, she says.

"In a way, it's almost like a replay of the Boeing depression — but this time it seems to be layoffs from across the board," she says. "And we have people who are still employed but getting beat by the cost of living. They need help with the groceries so they can pay the rent and utilities."

Also, in the wake of the recession, Sterling reports new interest among donors — an interest rooted to memories of the recession a decade ago. In just five days, she says, she received $7,000 in response to a plea for donations to buy meat for the food bank. "There's still a lot of paranoia here about the economy," she observes.

City officials are keeping a wary eye on the rest of the nation, mindful that Seattle, despite its economic health, would suffer like other cities in the event of a prolonged recession.

Further, like other cities, Seattle has become considerably dependent on the federal dollar. By one recent estimate, about $1 billion in federal money comes into Seattle each year in everything from food stamps for the poor to research grants for the University of Washington.

"The federal government — even beyond defense contracts — has a major impact on people of this city," Stafford says. "If we have any more budgetary cutbacks, we'll feel it here for sure."

The regional depression that struck in the early '70s came with a sharp change in the fortunes of Boeing. In mid-1968, the company was deluged with commercial jet aircraft orders and its employment exceeded 100,000. Three years later, when the supersonic transport program was killed and sales of aircraft slumped, employment was slashed to 37,000.

In those days, about 20 per cent of all the workers in the Seattle area worked for Boeing. But today, with employment more diversified, the figure is less than 10 per cent.

The multi-colored bars and graphs in economist Fusco's office tell the Boeing story. The blue line ("that horrible one," he says) shows aerospace manufacturing employment at a peak in 1969, followed by a deep valley to 1971. Since then, the blue aerospace line has climbed steadily, to an employment level of 78,600.

Last week, Boeing had more good news to report. T.A. Wilson, its chairman and chief executive officer, said at the company's annual meeting he expected Boeing's employment to remain "relatively stable" for the next two years.

Canadian architects lauded for bringing back the atrium

LONDON (UPI) — Canadian architecture is coming into its own, according to Britain's top architectural magazine, and has gone overboard for an ancient Roman idea to produce a look worthy of worldwide interest.

The Architectural Review, in a special issue devoted to modern Canadian architecture, said "out of this climate is arising an interpretation of architecture which is unaffected, unique — and of world-wide interest."

Two major forces are shaping the new look of Canada's buildings, the magazine said — weather and the "social climate." Canadian architects' response to the first is the ancient Roman idea of the atrium, an enclosed space at the center of a building.

"Other countries have atria, but none has pushed the idea so far or has applied it to so many building types and situations," wrote editor Lance Wright.

The magazine photographed and discussed many examples, from the Royal Bank of Canada building and the Atria North complex in Toronto, Ottawa's Bank of Canada and C. D. Howe buildings and Montreal's Complexe Desjardins to the "Plus 15" walkway plan in Calgary, which it calls "the world's most extensive climate-controlled downtown pedestrian movement system."

"Roman atria provided shade and coolness before entering the main parts of the building," a separate article said. "The Canadian version provides a haven from the bitter cold and blizzards of the Canadian winter."

About the "social climate" shaping new buildings, Wright said:

"The Canadian architect seems able to respond more readily and more naturally than architects elsewhere to the public demand for an architecture people can live with."

It is this which gives new Canadian architecture its world-wide importance, even more than outstanding talents like Arthur Erickson, whom the Architectural Review singles out for special praise.

"The Canadian architect does not tear his clients out of their century, but seeks to make their century acceptable to them by an imaginative infusion of archetypal images," Wright said.

Down payment? Just a penny, pal

HAYWARD, Calif. (UPI) — A buyer acquired a $100,000 house on Greenbriar Lane Thursday by putting up as a down payment a certified check for one penny.

The four-bedroom, two-bath home was offered in newspaper advertisements to qualified veterans for a one-cent down payment, but only four persons responded.

The first caller was willing to make the deal, and the other three only called to ask if the ad was true — even though the ad emphasized that it was "not a gimmick."

"I guess people just wouldn't believe it," said agent Geri Weaver.

It was a case of a seller having to sell fast, and Mrs. Weaver put together a deal for a Veterans Administration guaranteed loan in which the seller, rather than the buyer, absorbed loan fees and closing costs totalling $7250.

In the usual practice, qualifying veterans obtain mortgages without down payments, but they wind up the points and closing costs.

The buyers, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Beal, will move in June. Their monthly payment will be $915.

A sour show

We live in an age when variety has become not "the very spice of life" but an accepted antidote to boredom. Cowper, that most pious of sentimentalists, who would have objected strongly to having a phrase torn from context; would have been the first to point out that too much variety can be unsettling; that, in fact, it is the breaking of continuity which leads to discontent.

Specifically, I have in mind human relationships, but the truism applies more or less across the board, even to minor matters such as the writing of a column like this. It has been fully eight months since I contributed a regular column to this page and the break in continuity makes it difficult to regain stride. Forgive me, therefore, if I ramble a little in an effort to bridge the gap and return to normal.

The reason for my abrupt departure from this page last September was my acceptance of an invitation to make a study of the book publishing industry for the provincial government. I labored mightily for seven months and brought forth a report which I delivered to the Provincial Secretary in mid-April.

The study period proved to be at once interesting, frustrating, exhausting and enlightening, and I wouldn't have missed it for anything. Please don't ask me what I found out, what conclusions I reached, or what recommendations I made. My lips are officially sealed until the Hon. Evan Wolfe sees fit to make my report public.

An invitation to go to Vancouver early in May to witness the presentation of the Governor-General's literary awards seemed a fitting climax to such a study and I accepted gladly. This annual ceremony customarily takes place in Rideau Hall, Ottawa, so it was a notable break with tradition to stage it in British Columbia.

Such events should be staged in the evening, and they usually are, but this time it was staged at mid-day — to accommodate the CBC, who wished to include the event on national television news the same evening.

The invitation made no mention of dress but my companion and I dolled up in our daytime finery so we couldn't be faulted. The invitation also failed to mention refreshments but we easily solved that problem. The unlikely venue was the Arts Club Theatre on Granville Island, so we popped into the adjoining market and while my companion daintily nibbled an apple I wolfed a carton of clam chowder. Then, suitably nourished and clad, we left the bright sunshine and entered the dark theatre, agog with eager expectation.

The stage contained a lectern and a row of uncomfortable-looking wooden chairs, adequate for an all-candidates meeting in a municipal election but not quite the sort of setting one associates with the governor-general. There were no Mounties, scarlet-clad or otherwise. No aides. No music. No flags. No flowers. Fellow guests, garbed in everything from scruffy casual to the barely acceptable — and many of them with minds to match — left us with nothing more edifying to look at than a bunch of cameramen fussing with their equipment and jockeying for position.

The show proper commenced half-an-hour late when five men filed in from stage right like jurymen. They shambled across the stage to light applause and seated themselves stage left. This had the effect of focusing attention on the seven empty chairs, which remained conspicuously empty when the proceedings began.

First to address us was Timothy Porteous, associate director of the Canada Council, wearing his inscrutable mandarin look and a jacket with unfashionably wide lapels. Speaking effortlessly in French and English, he told us that the Governor-General had enthusiastically welcomed the idea of holding the ceremony in Vancouver but, alas, the head of state was in hospital awaiting surgery and his doctors had forbidden him to leave his bed.

Porteous of Ottawa evidently assumed that we rustics were ignorant of the fact that Mr. Schreyer was at that moment winging his way to far-off Yugoslavia to attend Tito's funeral, and we were too polite to tell him we knew. We knew Mr. Schreyer would not be with us, but we had expected him to send a distinguished stand-in, and when we found out that he hadn't we felt cheated, and then and there the whole show went sour.

After Porteous came the presentation of awards, each award being preceded by a speech by one of the chairman of the Canada Council's literary awards juries. Francois Ricard spoke only in French, and Carl Berger, slovenly dressed and with a speech delivery to match, mumbled his remarks in English.

The winners entered stage right in turn and were presented with their awards (a specially bound copy of their work and a cheque for $5,000) by one of two guests, Gilles Marcotte for the winners from Quebec and Earle Birney for the rest. Then, clutching their prizes, each winner found a chair and stoically suffered with us the rest of the proceedings.

First came Robert Melancon, a French-Canadian poetry winner. Polite applause. Then came poet Michael Ondaatje, who was greeted by a segment of the audience with vociferous applause and whistles of approval. Whether this was in recognition of his poetry or of his being jacketless in an open-necked sports shirt I don't know.

Ondaatje was followed by joint non-fiction winners in the French section, Sheila McLeod Arnopoulos and Dominque Clift, the latter a Canadian Press reporter. Applause was muted, probably because few had understood the French introduction which had been lavish in its praise of the couple's work.

The award for non-fiction in English went to Vancouver's (ex-Victoria's) Maria Tippett for her biography of Emily Carr. Generous applause greeted this local girl making good and she clearly relished every moment of it. And rightly so.

The novelists are always the stars of a show like this and this year saw an award for the only celebrated writer on the list, Quebec's Marie-Claire Blais. The shy, waif-like writer, her face completely concealed by hair, darted on to the stage, accepted her prize, dutifully went to her chair and proceeded to try to make herself as inconspicuous as possible. Poor girl. She wants sovereignty without the association and her talent has earned her that right.

ONDAATJE . . . whistles

Last came B.C. novelist Jack Hodgins, a tall, handsome, well-dressed young man. The applause was tumultuous and he accepted it like a professional actor, grinning broadly and happily posing for the cameramen.

The rest of the program was anti-climax. A lengthy, well-delivered speech entirely in French by Gilles Marcotte was wasted on most of the audience, and a series of rambling remarks by Earle Birney, who looks more and more like the aged Bernard Shaw but who lacks the Shavian wit and manner. His remarks were whining and parochial and told us more about Birney than about Canadian literature.

To stage a national literary function in British Columbia and to succeed in embarrassing a noted author and boring a wholly English-speaking audience with a surfeit of French demands a special kind of genius. What was needed was a sense of occasion and this was entirely lacking.

The disastrous day was saved somewhat by the provision of excellent refreshments, but I dread to think what it would have been like had the Canada Council also been responsible for the catering.

Well, having got all that off my chest I think I can confidently promise that my next column will be about books. It will be rather comforting to be back in harness between the familiar shafts.

Earle Birney toasts winner Jack Hodgins after rambling speech

By ANTHONY JENKINS

Gladys Deacon's beauty was so celebrated that her debut into London society at the turn of this century occasioned a cut-out paper dress-up doll in the fashionable toy shops. Yet in 1975 Hugo Vickers discovered her, aged 94, tidied away in a Northampton mental-home. She died at 97, a figure as mysterious as Charlotte Bronte's Mrs. Rochester or Daphne Du Maurier's Rebecca.

Although she was born in Paris and always considered herself a European, Gladys' parents were wealthy New Englanders. When she was eleven, her father shot her mother's suspected lover after surprising them in ambiguous tete-a-tete in the suite of their Cannes hotel. Monsieur died, and society on both sides of the Atlantic reeled at the scandal.

However, the event that dictated the direction of Gladys' life occured some few years later when the 14-year-old schoolgirl read the announcement of Consuelo Vanderbilt's engagement to the Ninth Duke of Marlborough. Jokingly she wrote to her mother, "O dear me, if I was only a little older I might 'catch' him yet! But Helas! I am too young though mature in the arts of woman's witchcraft and what is the use of one without the other? And I will have to give up all chance to ever get Marlborough."

But Fortune was to decide otherwise, though Gladys was 40 by the time she became the Duke's second Duchess. In the intervening years, Gladys had been the friend and rival of Consuelo, had caught the roving eye of the German Crown Prince (much to the Kaiser's horror), and had won the innocent affections of such luminaries as the Duke of Norfolk and the elderly Duke of Connaught, Queen Victoria's last surviving son.

With her eccentric wit and independent mind, Gladys also frequented more bohemian circles. Proust wrote that he had never met "a girl with such beauty, such magnificent intelligence, such goodness and charm," and Bernard Berenson thought of marrying her.

She knew artists like Rodin, Monet and Epstein, and was the acquaintance of writers like Edith Wharton, Anatole France and Gertrude Stein: "She was absolutely round . . . hideous she was! She wore hideous clothes in a disgusting way . . . but she was clever . . . Stein and I are the only two people who have had enough courage to put the manners they were born and bred with completely aside . . ."

Those artistic leanings were Gladys' undoing. In her youth she strove for a classic Greek profile and submitted to wax injections with devastating results to her facial contours and complexion. And when she finally became the mistress of Blenheim, she found the palace lonely, boring, provincial, and yearned to be back in Paris.

Her marriage was further exacerbated by the Duke's melancholic temperament. Having been lovers for 20 years, the Marlboroughs became enemies in wedlock. Gladys took to toying with a revolver at the dining table, and assuaged the boredom of her days by breeding spaniels and pruning roses.

The Duke treated her icily, preferring to spend most of his time in London. After a dozen years of warfare, he threatened to close up the palace, where upon the beseiged duchess, having held out for a time in the unheated pile cooking her meals on a primus stove, fled from the place never to return.

This peculiar story should have made an unusual, interesting book. As things turn out, Vickers' style proves almost unreadable. He tends to move from one idea to the next without transition, and his paragraphs contain such a jumble of undeveloped topics that one's attention is continually derailed.

Vickers seems to think that his readers will share his own fascination for barren lists of famous names, and he is unable to distance himself from his subject to let us see her plainly.

So despite his dedicated detective work in unearthing Gladys' past, the Duchess remains the sphynx figure she is portrayed as among the statues in Bleinheim's ornamental gardens.

Making of an artist

WALTER KELLYTHORNE

SOMEONE WITH ME: An Autobiography, by William Kurelek. McClelland & Stewart. $14.95.

William Kurelek was born on an Alberta farm in 1927 that had only recently been settled by his Ukrainian father. In its normal course, Kurelek's life would have led him to the land and its round of hard work and uncertainty — but Kurelek was not an ordinary boy, and his life took turns into realms far beyond - so it seemed - his peasant origins.

Someone With Me is Kurelek's story of that life and those realms. He completed it just before he died in 1977.

By his own account, Kurelek's boyhood in Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario was almost unbelievably harsh. Completely dominated by his father, the young Kurelek suffered from intense feelings of inferiority and paranoia. When hallucinations of demons and monsters weren't threatening him, other children were, and the terrible eye pains and sense of depersonalization that led him to an English asylum for four years were already a part of his life by the time he finished high school.

But he was always drawing and painting, so after graduating from college he moved to Ontario in the late 1940s to study at the College of Art.

In Mexico after his studies here, Kurelek worked and studied for several months and returned to Canada: unsure of himself, plagued by eye pain and depression, working as a laborer to support himself, estranged from his family. He decided to go to England.

His experiences there changed his life. His years in the asylum were uneventful enough: traditional psychotherapy seemed to have little effect, though his eye pains stopped, and electro-shock treatment seemed to ease his tension.

Kurelek's evolvement was, it seems, more a matter of his own intense delving into his past and into his painting; but that, he maintains, would have been useless if he had not become interested in Catholicism because of a woman he was seeing at the time. Kurelek was eventually converted to that religion, and though his arguments for the existence of God and the importance of a belief in that existence may seem naive and gratuitous at times, the man's sincerity and happiness are evident throughout his account.

Honest, simple, painfully clear, Kurelek's story is a rare glimpse into the heart of one of this country's finest artists.

Pearson dutifully followed U.S.

By WALTER YOUNG

LESTER PEARSON AND THE AMERICAN DILEMMA, by Peter Stursberg. Doubleday. $19.95.

This is the second volume of Peter Stursberg's oral history of the career of Lester Pearson. In some ways it is less satisfactory than the first. As with that volume, it consists of a series of interviews with the men with whom Pearson worked — in this case, as a diplomat and minister of external affairs. The cast of characters is impressive. It includes such former luminaries as Dean Rusk, Averell Harriman, Chester Ronning, Alex Douglas-Home and General E.L.M. Burns.

Each contributes recollections of the significant stages in Pearson's diplomatic career. Stursberg provides the necessary historical setting, and does it well. There are times when the Stursberg factual interludes are more enlightening than the transcribed comments of the great men.

As one would expect, the early chapters are the least illuminating. They are as much about the early history of the department of external affairs as they are about Lester Pearson. The first 70 pages or so are more of a capsule history of the period between the wars in which Pearson appears only peripherally.

It is easy to understand why the department was considered to be a prestige portfolio for so long. For one thing, it was initially peopled by an intellectual elite of dedicated, scholarly men. They took the practice of diplomacy seriously, and attempted to understand the country in which they were posted with the dedication of the scholar.

It is not surprising that the legacy of this period in the evolution of Canada's foreign representation is as much in the field of scholarship as diplomacy. The contrast between that period and more recent times is perhaps best illustrated by the contrast between Norman Robertson and Paul Martin as Canadian High Commissioners in London.

The stature of the department was also the result of the apparent balance of power in the world during the thirties and forties. Canada was — or at least struggled to be — the vital link between the North Atlantic partners: Britain and the United States. Canada was able to do this effectively because, under the direction of Prime Minister Mackenzie King, our first secretary of state for external affairs, we were making a determined effort to demonstrate our independence from Great Britain.

Given the crucial role Canada saw for herself, it was not surprising that King would pass the prize portfolio on to his designated successor as prime minister, Louis St. Laurent. Pearson followed St. Laurent, although, unlike him, external affairs was the only portfolio Pearson ever held — undoubtedly a handicap when he was prime minister.

As the powers shifted in the postwar period, Canada's role changed and diminished. Britain was less important, the United States a superpower and Canada hardly needed as the go-between. The extension of NATO beyond its purely North Atlantic limits as well as its essentially military character demonstrated the declining relevance of Canada's role in world affairs. The struggle was to escape complete domination by the United States.

This is the American dilemma of Stursberg's title. Pearson was minister of external affairs and prime minister when Canadian subordination to American foreign policy became complete. It was often at the expense of established principle and against the advice of the cadre of experts — like Chester Ronning — the department had built up. Pearson saw the United States as the leader of the West and, ever dutiful, he followed.

This view led Person to support American positions and American resolutions at the United Nations, often, as Stursberg points out, acting against his better judgment. The failure of Canada to recognize China and our support of the embargo against China in 1950-51 reflected that approach. In some measure it appears that Pearson did not fully recognize the fabric of American foreign policy as being shot through with the colors of American domestic politics.

Perhaps the most unhappy example of Canadian willingness to give too much credence to American views was the tragic case of Herbert Norman. The tragedy is the more poignant because Norman was, before his suicide, instrumental in helping to set up the United Nations Emergency Force and, of course, it was for his work in this regard that Pearson, Norman's minister, won the Nobel Peace Prize.

PEARSON . . . lost principles

As Charles Taylor has pointed out in his excellent essay on Norman, when Pearson first learned of American suspicions of Norman, he had him recalled from Tokyo and subjected to a six-week grilling. This satisfied Norman's superiors about his loyalty, but the experience left Norman "deeply disturbed." Subsequent accusations by various red-baiters before American Congressional Committees added to his distress.

Although he did not doubt his loyalty, Pearson had Norman moved from the Far Eastern Division of External Affairs — where he was the senior officer and an acknowledged expert — and posted to New Zealand in order to placate the Americans. Thus did Pearson respond to American hysteria at the cost of his colleague's self-esteem.

In some ways this episode sums up Pearson's American dilemma. Although often satisfied with the rectitude of his own position — or the loyalty of his colleagues — he nevertheless felt bound to submit to American pressure because the Americans were, after all, the leaders of the West. Protest verbally, express concern — as at Temple University in 1965 — but in the last analysis line up with the United States because you know they really are the boss.

The Pearson that emerges from these interviews is a man confronted by the harsh antithesis of politics and principle. He lacked political experience enough to know the sensible limits to either side. He sacrificed principle to politics, even when, ironically, it would have been wiser politically to stick to principles. Some of this emerges from Stursberg's book, but too often the questions remain hanging in the air. The interviews are interesting enough, but, by themselves, not particularly enlightening. There are too few answers, probably because, as Shakespeare wrote in Henry V, "old men forget."

Chinese stores make way for West

By NEIL MORGAN

SOOCHOW, China — The Chinese sell an herbal medicine to cure overburdened brains. There are aphrodisiacs in big bottles with labels in Chinese and English, listing unspeakable ingredients.

Such items can be bought in friendship stores with hard Western currencies, along with $100 bicycles (prices in U.S. funds), $50 violins, $30 scrolls and 50-cent Cokes in the familiar red can but with Chinese calligraphy.

The Chinese are careful to avoid calling visitors comrades. The official term is friends. So the stores set up to sell Chinese goods for Western currencies are called friendship stores.

In Shanghai, a mini-friendship store was set up in a banquet hall where our tour group lunched. Two hours later we moved on, and in another 10 minutes the store had disappeared.

They will even evict all Chinese from a department store to make room for spenders from abroad. There is less to buy in most department stores, but the thousands who cleared a path through the streets of the remote City of Lienyunkangshih so we could visit their department store weren't disappointed. Most of us emerged wearing Chinese hard hats made of reed and strengthened with nuts and bolts. The laughter in the streets was, in my judgment, friendly.

Hard currency is so honored in the five-story Shanghai emporium called No. 1 Department Store that elevators may be used only by foreigners.

Show windows are bright with plastic pails and newly colorful clothing. Many goods can be bought by the Chinese only with rating coupons. Among them: black-and-white, 12-inch TV sets at about $265, almost a year's wages for the average Chinese. (They are upgrading TV with U.S-made cameras and transmission equipment. Peking and Shanghai offer about three and one-half hours of programming each evening.)

Bright billboards in drab Shanghai advertise Japanese goods that are not yet available.

Other goods are for display only, like a $5,000 camera outfit called Red Flag (a copy of the Leica), and 17-jewel gold wristwatches. Chinese who can afford them buy a simple copy of the Rolliflex camera for about $120, and steel pocket watches or wristwatches for $18 to $80.

Other Chinese copies are available for the unfortunate visitor who must replace his camera. Louis Engel of Scarsborough, N.Y., lost his 35mm camera during our tour and set out to buy another in Peking. The best available model was called Peafowl. He paid $330. A copy of a 1950s Minolta SR-1, Peafowl lacks an exposure meter. Engel hovered by other photographers for the rest of the journey, calling out: "Hey, what's the exposure?"

Department stores are brightened by gaily colored Thermos jugs at $4 to $6. A 40-foot wall in Shanghai's No. 1 store is solid with Thermoses. All drinking water in China is boiled, and the Thermos is indispensable for making tea or instant coffee.

Enameled tin washbasins decorated with birds and flowers ($2) cover many counters. Drab and heavy winter clothing of wool and polyester mix, and gray, collarless capes took up a floor at Shanghai's No. 1. Treadle sewing machines named Typical, much like the Singers of 50 years ago, occupy half of floor.

In the sports department I counted 24 models of ping-pong paddles costing from 37 cents to $6.50. Nearby is a jungle of bicycles. Feng Huang, with its emblem of entwined snakeheads, is considered the sturdiest, at just more than $100. Their sole accessory: the bell whose metallic jingle sets the tone of Chinese streets.

As a rule, the necessities are affordable by Chinese, but luxury items are expesive. Yet, in a nation that moves by bicycle, those, too, are considered luxuries.

Visitors seeking antiques are disappointed. Chiang Kai-shek and the Nationalists took a major part of China's treasures to Taiwan in 1949, and the National Museum of Taipei outranks any in China. Many other mainland vestiges of old China were burned or defaced during the Cultural Revolution that began a decade ago.

If the visitor finds anything more than 150 years old, he needs a permit to take it out of China. Most scrolls and jade and ivory carvings found in friendship stores are of recent origin and lack the grace of earlier craftsmanship.

Most travellers buy silk, copies of old prints and scrolls, embroidery and linen. Some arrange to ship porcelain or rugs, a best buy.

My impulse purchase was at the needlepoint factory in Yentai that produced the majestic tapestry behind the status of Mao Tse-tung in his Peking mausoleum.

It was a wall piece of classic Ming horses in brown and black, with the background left to be needlepointed by the buyer.

With the help of two interpreters I arranged to have the piece completed at the factory and mailed to me back home.

As I handed over $37 in Chinese yuan and took my receipt, the factory manager stood beaming and chattering. I asked what he was saying.

"He says," my guide said, "this is the first overseas order he has filled."

By the time it arrives, it'll be a surprise.

Dixon Hill lighthouse on San Salvador, Columbus' landfall

AROUND the WORLD with
STAN DELAPLANE

PARADISE ISLAND, Bahamas — On October 12, 1492, Christopher Columbus rowed ashore and landed on the sandy beach of San Salvador in the Bahamas.

He wrote to the King of Spain: "The beauty of these islands surpasses that of any other land as much as the day surpasses the night in splendor." A piece of press agent writing I doubt will ever be topped, even though the Bahamas is spending $11 million this year for tourist business.

There are 240,000 citizens on the islands, 85 percent black. Most work as maids, cab drivers and bartenders. Cooks, beach boys or tour guides. Sales people in the enormous Straw Market, the first thing you wade through when you get off a cruise ship.

The warm Bahamas get two million tourists a year. Most come from the frozen winter East. But Western Airlines has opened a route from Los Angeles to Nassau.

Says Baltron Bethel -- he's director of tourism, "We think there's a substantial market from the West Coast. The Bahamas are different."

Ponce de Leon stopped off while searching for the Fountain of Youth. Sir Harry Oakes, the Canadian millionaire, was mysteriously murdered here in his mansion.

Howard Hughes holed up for two-and-a-half years in the posh Britania Beach Hotel. Took over the eighth and ninth floors. (Elevators didn't stop at those floors.) The hotel built a metal staircase to his private helicopter pad on the roof. (He never used it.)

Gambling is big in Nassau and Paradise Island just across the bridge. The government collects $10 million on licences.

The biggest is Resorts Inc. It was Mary Carter Paint Co. of Chicago when I was here 10 years ago. Certainly a pretty name for a gambling operation.

As Resorts Inc., they made a bid to buy Pan American Airlines. Recently when gambling became legal in Atlantic City, they opened a glittering casino there. Stock jumped in one day from $10 to $90 as I remember.

The Bahamas have always had a free-wheeling reputation. They say 99 percent of investments are foreign-owned. When Englishmen could not take pounds out of Britain, there was some kind of fiddle where they transferred pounds to the Bahamas -- then British-owned.

The pounds somehow became legal to move into dollars. Or to be spent on sun, sand, sex and seven-come-eleven.

There are still 300 banks on the islands. And I don't imagine they're there for bus boys to deposit the weekly paychecks.

It was plain Hog Island before the high rollers of Resort Inc. moved in and named it Paradise. Built two posh hotels connected by a gambling casino. Hired Italian croupiers trained in English gaming houses.

The minimum bet on the crap tables, $5. (Bahamas citizens are not allowed to gamble.)

Paradise has had a string of fancy owners: Joseph Lynch (of Merrill, Lynch, Fenner & Smith) sold it to Axel Wenner-Gren who in turn sold to A & P heir Huntington Hartford. He sold it to Mary Carter Paint Co.

"People don't always travel to gamble," says the Bahamas tourist board. "We've got the sun and the sea and the beaches."

The Bahamas are a lot slicker than Vegas. Most women arrive here with a roll-away rack of resort clothing, Jourdan shoes and enough diamonds to keep Van Cleef and Arpels in business for a hundred years. Bulgari's and Tiffany's, too.

Zimbabwe tourism: much to build upon

By GEORGE BUCHAN

SALISBURY — Now that Rhodesia has become Zimbabwe, expectations are that it won't be long before the new nation becomes a target of tourists from around the world.

Time will be needed to redevelop the tourist trade, of course, but the country has many attractions, including one of the world's greatest, Victoria Falls, and because the build-up of foreign exchange reserves will be important to the nation's new leaders, it can be assumed that re-charging tourism will be among the leading priorities.

And it has a full-fledged tourism plant embracing some excellent hotels and restaurants, resort areas, first-rate roads and a national airline.

The country's new name, Zimbabwe, was associated by most visitors in the past with one of the better-known tourist sights in this part of the world, the Zimbabwe Ruins 300 km south of Salisbury. This national monument comprises the largest complex of ruins in all of Africa south of the Sahara and should benefit significantly in future from the tie-in with the country's new name.

There is some dispute over the origin of the ruins, but they are believed to be the remains of a mini-state that flourished from around 1200 to 1450 A.D. and have been regarded as one of Africa's greatest mysteries ever since they were discovered by the outside world in 1868.

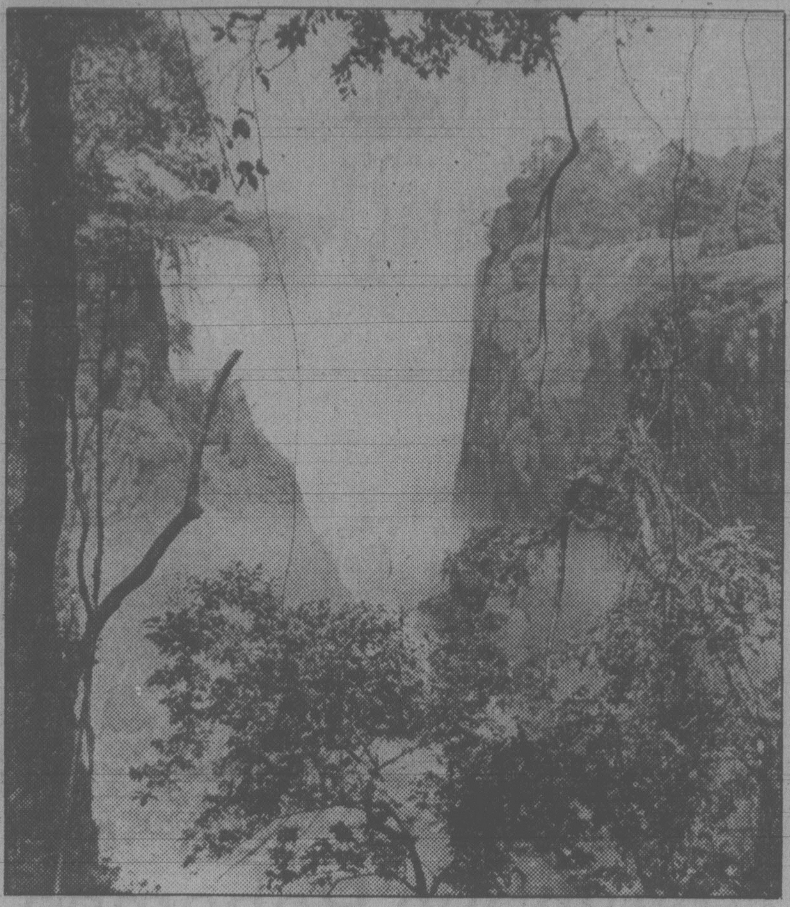
The accepted explanation is that the mini-state was based on gold trade with the Arabs, which would account for discoveries around the ruins of articles from China, India and Arabia. These, along with old Zimbabwe birds carved out of soapstone, are among the exhibits on display in a small museum at the site.

The fact that much of the building is of well-fitted dry stone construction adds to the mystery of origin and leads some visitors to believe that Arabs were probably responsible for supervising the erection of walls and buildings.

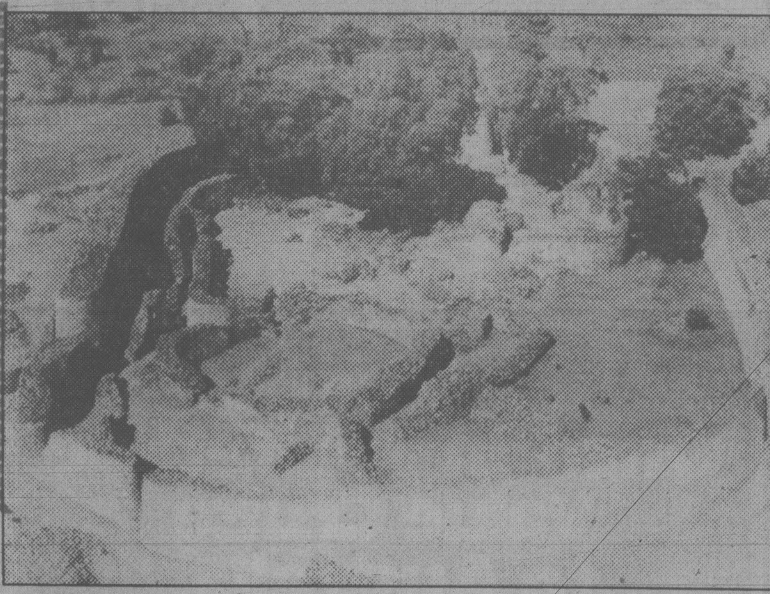
The ruins are divided into two main sections, the earlier ones at the Acropolis on Zimbabwe Hill, and the Valley of Ruins comprising groups of remains dominated by one known as the Great Enclosure with walls more than 10 metres (33 feet) high.

There are other scattered ruins in Rhodesia similar in style to those of the Zimbabwe complex and these are believed to have been administrative outposts occupied by officials of the old Zimbabwe state and their families.

Close by the main complex is a reconstructed Maranga village that is designed to show how the local people lived at the time of the discovery of Zimbabwe by the white man more than a century ago. It is particularly interesting here to watch a potter making pots by the old African method, without the aid of a potter's wheel. Also popular with visitors is a witch doctor who tells fortunes from the positions of bones he tosses onto the ground.



Victoria Falls has earned the name 'Smoke that Thunders'



The Zimbabwe ruins are located 300 km south of Salisbury

But just as there was in Rhodesia, the visitor to the new Zimbabwe will find much more than the Zimbabwe Ruins and Victoria Falls to interest him.

One of these is Wankie, the country's largest national park, embracing an area of close to 15,000 square kilometers, more than 2½ times the area of Prince Edward Island. The main camp lies about 200 km east of Victoria Falls. The park is noted for its elephant herds and range of antelope.

Kariba, one of the largest man-made lakes in the world, embraces an area of 5,000 square kilometers, making it almost as big as Prince Edward Island. The lake (281 km long and 32 km across at its widest point) was created in the 1950s with the construction of a 129-meter-high (420 feet) dam at the head of the Kariba Gorge that was built to provide hydro-electric power for both Rhodesia and Zambia.

The creation of the lake brought problems, not the least of which involved rescuing the animals that inhabited the region. Many animals did drown but thousands were rescued in what was called Operation Noah and which at the time caught the world's imagination.

Of all Zimbabwe's attractions, however, the one that is likely to remain at the top of the list, particularly with overseas visitors, is Victoria Falls. But it, too, is due for a name change, probably to the one used by local Africans, Mosi-oa-tunya (sometimes run together as Mosioatunya), the Smoke that Thunders.

As almost everyone knows, the first European ever to see the falls was the Scottish explorer and missionary, David Livingstone, on Nov. 16, 1855, although some Englishman farther south had heard of the existence of the spectacle as early as 1840.

The falls occur at a point close to midway between the source of the 2,800-km Zambese River and its outlet into the Indian Ocean. At this midway point, the river widens to 1,700 meters (well over a mile) and plunges across the complete width of the chasm 70 to 108 meters (230 to 345 feet) deep at a rate of up to 545 million litres (120 million gallons) a minute in the flood season, sending spray as much as 500 meters (1,640 feet) into the air. Aptly named, the Smoke that Thunders.

The falls are best seen when the flow of the Zambesi River is low (the lowest flow occurs in April-May). In flood season (November-December) the dense spray, which descends on onlookers like a heavy shower, makes it virtually impossible to see this mighty cataract.

Zimbabwe's national capital of Salisbury (also in the cards to get a name change, probably to Harare, as are many other places and monuments in the country) is served by South Africa Airways out of New York via Johannesburg, and by British Airways out of London via Nairobi.

Updated information on visiting Zimbabwe along with current hotel rates and other prices may be obtained from the Zimbabwe Tourist Board, 95 Stanley Avenue, Salisbury (or Harare), Zimbabwe, or from the Zimbabwe Information Office for North America at 2582 McGill Terrace N.W., Washington, D.C.

Paris comfort station undergoing big change

By FRANK J. PRIAL

PARIS — The streets of Paris are changing. There will be new kiosks, new poster-plastered Morris columns and, above all, new vespasiennes.

For visitors in the past, it was often the vespasienne that first made it startlingly clear that Paris was not Grand Rapids. The vespasienne — after Vespasian, the Roman emperor — is the traditional green outdoor comfort station that is as much a part of Paris as the Arc de Triomphe and the Eiffel Tower.

To untested North American sensibilities, the partly enclosed urinal can be an affront, at least at the first encounter; to many Parisians they are — or were — a way of life. Others campaigned vigorously against them over the years in the name of sanitation and public morality. And, in fact, they have been disappearing from the boulevards steadily since the 1930s. In the years after World War I, there were more than 1,200 vespasiennes in the city. By 1939 there were 700. There were 321 in 1961 and, according to the mayor's office, there are just 103 today.

But there has been considerable resentment among many Parisians over the disappearance of what were once called chalets de necessite. As late as 1974, according to one study, 45 percent of all Paris habitations were without toilets. Now the city has embarked on a four-month program to test a new version of the old Paris landmark. The major difference between the new and the old: the new ones can also be used by women.

The traditional model, doorless and with a partial metal screen, was for men only. The new versions, oval-shaped, about 10 feet long and fully enclosed, are made of ribbed concrete to discourage graffiti and posters and resemble small blockhouses. They are lockable and open only on the payment of a franc, about 25 cents.

Inside, one portion resembles a traditional lavatory with toilet and sink. There is also piped-in music. The rest of the space is filled with complicated equipment which, once the patron has left, automatically cleans and disinfects the entire compartment.

Three of the new stations are now in use around the Georges Pompidou Center for the Arts, the strikingly modern Beaubourg Museum, probably the most frequently used pedestrian area in Paris. According to the developer, Jean-Claude Decaux, the city is ready to call for bids for 400 to 500 of the new stations once they have successfully passed the test period.

The new vespasiennes are actually a commercial enterprise, much like the plastic bus shelters, which began here and subsequently have become a political issue in New York City. The estimated cost of each unit is about $30,000. The city would pay about $10,000 a year in rent, which it would hope to recover from usage fees. While Paris is the principal market for the new comfort stations, Decaux said Lyons, Rouen and St. Etienne had expressed an interest and were awaiting results of the tests.

The first vespasiennes appeared in Paris in 1841 and were called Rambuteau columns after Claude-Philibert de Rambuteau, Prefect of Seine Department under Louis Philippe and the man who first had the facilities installed. One of the first modern sanitation engineers, he also installed 1,800 public water outlets in the city in 18 years.

According to tradition, Emperor Vespasian installed the first public conveniences in Rome. According to historians, the facilities had long existed in Rome and Vespasian was the first to charge a fee for their use.

Along with the new comfort facilities, Parisians will soon find 164 new newsstands — kiosques a journaux — throughout the city. At a time when street crime has made the newsstand a rarity in many cities, Paris has 353 working kiosks, 10 of which date from before 1900 and which are protected as landmarks. They are the survivors of the first heroic-style kiosks, designed by Jean-Antoine Davioud, Prix de Rome architect, on the orders of Baron Georges Haussmann, the man who rebuilt Paris in the 19th century.

A committee, whose members included Mayor Jacques Chirac and Guy Laroche, the couturier, was created in 1977 to come up with a plan for a new kiosk. Trips were undertaken in the provinces and other countries to look at kiosks. None seemed suitable. Finally, models were built and shown to the public. One has been chosen, the Mayor's office said, but it is being kept under wraps until Mayor Chirac can find a suitable — and presumably politically appropriate — time to unveil it.

Also to come are 50 more Morris columns. They are the green towers with minaret-like caps that are used to display posters of films, plays and musical events. There are already 383 around town. The colonnes Morris date from 1860 when the city put up 150 to end the uncontrolled display of billboards.

"For once the city fathers know what they are doing," said an architect who lives here. "The life of the streets and boulevards is the heart of Paris life, and they are doing a little to improve it."

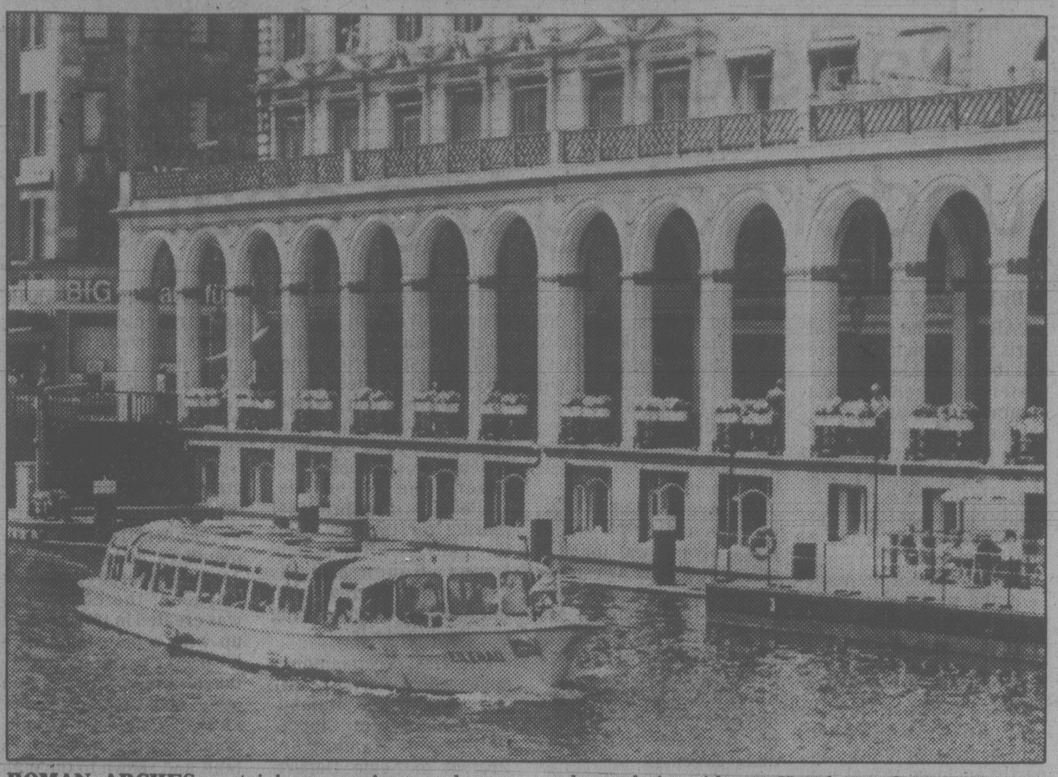
Franc hurts Swiss hotels

BERN, Switzerland (UPI) — Swiss hotels suffered a 3.5 percent drop in business last year because of the continuing high rate of the Swiss franc against most other currencies.

The Federal Statistics Bureau said hotels registered 30.5 million overnight stays in 1979, which was 1.16 million fewer than in 1978. Domestic tourism was on the rise, but foreign visitors declined by 8.5 percent.



ROMAN ARCHES, patrician mansions and gardens, a steeple-pierced skyline and flowers everywhere are the attractions of a boat ride over lakes and canals in midtown Hamburg, Germany. It's a city of bridges — 2,123 of them — more than any other city in Europe.

Summer flights to BRITAIN and EUROPE...

'WARDAIR CLASS'

A little Wardair Class goes a long way. So if you're planning a trip to Britain or Europe this summer, go with the airline that offers the kind of inflight service other airlines charge extra for.

We'll treat you to a full course steak dinner, served hot from the galley on china dinnerware. We'll cook your steak to your liking — rare, medium or well done; offer you a choice of imported wines with dinner and tempt you with our irresistible desserts, followed by liqueurs and coffee. And during the flight, the bar is open for drinks, beer, soft drinks, juice, coffee, tea or milk.

Wardair Class also means you'll be encouraged to get up and stretch your legs because we want you to explore the attractive interior of our spacious, wide-bodied aircraft — a Boeing 747 or a DC-10.

Crusader Anita Bryant files for divorce

MIAMI (AP) — Singer Anita Bryant, a crusader against the disintegration of the American family, has filed for divorce from her husband of nearly 20 years.

Her marriage to former disc jockey Bob Green has "irretrievably broken," Miss Bryant says in a petition filed Thursday in Dade circuit court.

In a statement released Thursday from her Miami Beach mansion, Miss Bryant said her husband "violated my most precious asset: my very conscience."

She claimed Green cooperated "with certain hired staff members who conspired to control me and to use my name and reputation to build their personal careers instead of my ministry."

Green was not available for comment.

Miss Bryant, who did not name the staff members, said she is resigning from Anita Bryant Ministries, a centre dedicated to preserving the American family.

In the divorce petition, Miss Bryant says she is "without sufficient funds" to support the couple's four children. She asks that Green pay child support and allow her and the children to use the 25-room mansion until it can be sold.

The petition says that Green moved out of the home but then returned, creating "an intolerable situation."

Miss Bryant, a former Miss Oklahoma and runner-up in the Miss America pageant, gained national attention in 1977 for her Save Our Children campaign against a gay rights ordinance in Dade County.

She also is known for commercials promoting Florida orange juice and for numerous albums of popular and religious music. She also has made numerous appearances at state fairs, conventions and religious gatherings.

Raised by relatives after her parents were divorced when she was 3, Miss Bryant was a former Miss Oklahoma and runnerup in the 1960 Miss America beauty pageant. She began her entertainment career when she was discovered by Arthur Godfrey.

Miss Bryant and Green, a Miami radio station disc jockey at the time, were married at Tulsa, Okla., on June 25, 1960. She was so conservative, she disc osed that she was shocked when Green first held her hand in public.

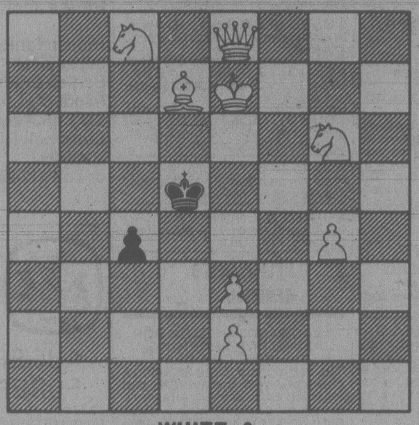
CHESSMASTER

By George Koltanowski
International Chess Master

PROBLEM
By D. Muller, Germany

BLACK: 2



WHITE: 8

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

* * *

WHITE:
A. Anderson (2087)
BLACK:
S. Laird (1884)

1.	P-K4	P-K4
2.	N-KB3	N-QB3
3.	B-B4	B-B4
4.	P-QN4	BxP
5.	P-B3	B-R4
6.	P-Q4	PxP
7.	0-0	P-Q3(a)
8.	PxP	N1-K2
9.	N-N5	0-0
10.	Q-R5	P-KR3
11.	NxP	RxN
12.	BxRch	K-B1
13.	B-N3	Q-K1
14.	Q-B3ch	Resigns

(a) Should have tried 7 . . . P-Q4 here.

KORCHNOI IN ACTION

Played on Board One in the Red Star (Belgrade) and Volmac (Rotterdam) interclub match in Belgrade, December, 1978.

WHITE:
Lubomir Ljubojevic
BLACK:
Korchnoi, Volmac

1.	P-K4	P-K3
2.	P-Q3	P-Q4
3.	N-Q2	P-QB4
4.	N1-B3	N-QB3
5.	P-KN3	N-B3
6.	B-N2	B-K2
7.	0-0	0-0
8.	R-K1	P-QN4
9.	P-QR4	P-N5
10.	PxP	NxP
11.	N-B4	B-N2
12.	B-Q2	B-KB3
13.	Q-B1	N-N3
14.	N-K3	P-QR4
15.	N-N4	B-K2
16.	B-N5	N-Q5
17.	BxB	QxB
18.	NxN	PxN
19.	BxB	QxB
20.	Q-B4	QR-B1
21.	R-K2	KR-Q1
22.	P-N3	N-Q4
23.	Q-B3	P-B3
24.	RxP	Q-KB2
25.	R-R6	P-R4
26.	RxRP	PxN
27.	QxNP	RxP
28.	QxQP	P-B4
29.	R-K1	P-B5
30.	R-B5	RxR
31.	QxR	P-B6
32.	Q-B4	N-B6
33.	QxP	N-K7ch
34.	K-R1	RxP
35.	P-R5	RxP
36.	Q-QR4(a)	Q-K3
37.	R-R1	R-N7
38.	Q-Q1	Q-B4
39.	P-R6(b)

(a) His last mistake. With 26. Q-K4 the outcome would not be too clear.

(b) White's flag fell at this moment, and with it he lost the game. Black would have continued with 39 . . . NxPch; 40. BPxN, P-B7, wins.

WITHOUT SIGHT OR SOUND

International Master Andy Soltis reports of all the chess-players who watched the Amazing Kreskin's New York chess exhibition, on March 22, 1979, the only one who was not skeptical seemed to be Grandmaster Viktor Korchnoi.

Kreskin appeared to be playing Korchnoi and Robert Byrne simultaneously, without sight of board and without being told his opponents' moves! Masters in the audience suspected Kreskin was being secretly coached, was picking up electric impulses from the board or just playing random moves. He did make several illegal moves.

Here is his game against Korchnoi, in which you will see that his opponent allowed him to castle illegally.

WHITE
Korchnoi
BLACK:
Kreskin

1.	P-Q4	N-KB3
2.	P-QB4	P-QN3
3.	P-B3	P-Q4
4.	PxP	QxP
5.	P-K4	Q-Q1
6.	N-B3	P-K4
7.	PxP	P-B4
8.	PxN	B-Q3
9.	B-N5ch	N-B3
10.	BxNch	B-Q2
11.	QxB	0-0!!
12.	BxB	QxB
13.	Q-N3	Q-K1
14.	QxP mate

The solution to the problem above is: 1. B-R4, K-B4; 2. Q-N5 mate; or 1. . . . K-K5; 2. K-Q6 mate; or 1. . . . P-B6; Q-B6 mate; etc.

Solar flare not so hot

Boulder, Colo. (AP) — Forecasters have changed their prediction and now say a solar flare that occurred just south of the sun's equator will have little effect on Earth.

Shortly after the flare occurred Wednesday, forecasters for the national oceanic and atmospheric administration said it would cause a disturbance in the Earth's magnetic field within 48 hours. Such flares can disrupt radio communications.

Weddings

Ryder — Jennings

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Jennings are pleased to announce the marriage of their youngest daughter, Sandra Louise to Russell Terry Ryder, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ryder of Lethbridge, Alberta. Reverend J. Allan officiated in the double ring ceremony, April 19, 1980 at St. Aidan's Church.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride looked radiant in a Victorian style gown of silk sheen entrain, with a tulled net hat and veil. Her bouquet was white roses, violets and baby's breath.

An afternoon reception at Oak Bay Beach Hotel was followed by a buffet dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Jennings. The toast to the bride was proposed by her two brothers, Jim and Ted Jennings.

The bride was attended by Miss Cathy Cunningham and Mrs. Verna March, the best man was Mr. Gary Martin from Halifax and the usher Mr. Julius Smolders.

Mr. and Mrs. Neily left on a vacation in Hawaii, and will reside in Vancouver on their return.

Lyall — Macauley

Gordon Head United Church was the scene of a lovely double-ring ceremony at four o'clock on Saturday, May 10, 1980, when Catherine Alison, only daughter of Mrs. J. Alison Macauley and the late James A. Macauley, became the bride of Robert Gordon, son of Mr. Don Lyall of Duncan and Mrs. Mavis Lyall of Courtenay, B.C. Rev. Russell Vickers officiated at the ceremony and Mrs. Olia Vickers was the soloist, accompanied by Mrs. Ruth Gray at the organ.

Given in marriage by her brother, Andrew, the bride was radiant in a beautiful satin gown made by her mother. Featuring an Empire waist line, the gown was trimmed with French lace around the neckline and the bottom of the skirt which swept to a cathedral train. Her three-quarter-length illusion veil was held in place by her lace Juliet cap. She carried red silk roses and stephanotis.

The matron of honour, Mrs. Gerald Merlo from Trail, B.C., and sister of the groom, was attired in a gown of pale olive green crepe with a waist-length jacket of floral voile.

The bridesmaids, Miss Katherine Elston, Miss Debbie Meredith of Creston, and Miss Karen Knox of Sarnia, a cousin of the bride, wore similar dresses in pale rose crepe with matching jackets. They carried baskets of silk flowers in various tones of pink.

Attendants for the groom were Mr. Frank Boshard and Mr. Dennis Webber. Ushers were Mr. George Macauley, brother of the bride, and Mr. David Lyall, brother of the groom.

The mother of the bride wore a full-length gown of floral georgette with a corsage of pink silk roses, while the mother of the groom was attired in a gown of turquoise crepe, complemented with a fresh white orchid.

A dinner-dance reception was held at the Faculty Club, University of Victoria, where Mr. D. W. Cameron, uncle of the bride, proposed the Toast to the Bride and Groom. Music was supplied by Denny's Canned Music.

For going away, the bride chose a grey suedine suit with a cranberry silk blouse and a matching grey felt hat. Her corsage was of cranberry silk flowers.

Higgins — O'Brian

Invest your time to inquire about a RARE opportunity today. This property is all ready to move onto. The 1971, 2250 sq. ft. home was constructed complete with: fine stall barn, tack and feed room, truck and trailer building, two exercise riding rings and much more. Fenced paddocks and fields offer continued enjoyment for a variety of animals if having all horses was not your thing, all though the property is well set up for them.
If family fun is what you are looking for, and you have the financial means, then you may wish to see the little bit of "Olde Country" that rings in the air when you walk around this farm. Farm taxes in place to the current owner.
A wonderful south exposure, fertile soil and a carefully planned full acre design layout make this land use achieve maximum benefits to the beholder. View this exclusive by appointment only please. Phone NATIONAL TRUST — GARRY BENTHAM: 595-2121 at your earliest convenience to avoid disappointment.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospecf to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

Deaths and funerals

308 CARDS OF THANKS

It was my original intention to personally acknowledge each and every expression of sympathy after the recent death of my dear husband, Vince. However, the numbers have been so overwhelming that it has become impossible. My heartfelt thanks to all for the beautiful cards, letters, prayers and many acts of kindness. Such warm tributes confirm what we have always known - that he was greatly loved and respected by all who knew him. Special thanks to Dr. David Lintern, McCall Brothers, St. Partick's Parish and all the clergy. Also to the staff of Second Royal at Jubilee Hospital, particularly Nurses Morgan and Lane and Dr. Ripley for their tender care and concern for all of us during his final hours. Ida Clarkson & Family.

Emmie Burdock and Family would like to express their sincere appreication for all the cards, kind wishes and deeds extended during the recent loss of their dear husband, father and grandfather who passed away May 16, 1980 at the Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Keith and Lodzia wish to sincerely thank friends and family, the Saanich Peninsula Hospital, the staff of the Brentwood Medical Clinic, and Rev. R. Sansom, for their sincere kindness at the passing of our mother, Mrs. Doris N. Littler. — Keith and Lodzia Littler

2nd test of Agent Orange victims

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The Veteran's Administration says it will re-examine hundreds of Vietnam veterans who claim their exposure to the chemical defoliant Agent Orange caused skin disease.

Max Cleland, the VA administrator, said Friday that doctors at VA hospitals would begin the re-examinations immediately.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., chairman of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, had asked the agency to do something about complaints that VA doctors were "systematically misdiagnosing or ignoring" skin condition cases among Vietnam veterans.

Cleland said the skin ailments had been "systematically diagnosed" by the doctors and had not been ignored. He said a skin rash called chloracne, which resembles jungle rot, has been linked to the defoliant.

"We feel we've been pretty accurate in our diagnoses," Cleland said. "But some people may have been missed."

Agent Orange was used widely in Vietnam from 1962 to 1971 to destroy the dense jungle and thus deny food and shelter to the enemy and expose major transportation routes in South Vietnam.

Boat people still sail, despite Vietnamese gov't

SONGKHLA, Thailand (AP) — A worldwide outcry forced Vietnam to restrict its refugee exodus, but the boat people keep sailing out by the thousands in their flimsy craft, defying government patrols, pirates and other perils of the South China Sea.

Their numbers have diminished since the Vietnamese government agreed almost a year ago to stop the organized departures of its people — mostly ethnic Chinese — it considered undesirable.

But a steady flow of 3,000 to 7,000 a month is reaching the shores of Southeast Asian nations to be resettled in the United States, Canada, Australia, France and other Western nations.

As with the present exodus of Cuban refugees, Washington has been trying for almost a year to establish an "orderly departure" system for refugees from Vietnam. An agreement with Vietnam remains elusive.

The Cuban government has swelled its refugee ranks with drug addicts and criminals. Similarly, U.S. diplomats here complain that Vietnam appears to be trying to turn an "orderly departure" program into a means of ridding itself of misfits in its new socialist society.

The U.S. has submitted long lists of the names of Vietnamese who have relatives in the United States or have a claim to U.S. citizenship. Under an agreement, those names must be matched by names on a Hanoi-provided list of people who want to emigrate.

The highest number of Vietnamese arrivals in Southeast Asia was 76,774 in May 1979, just before an international conference in Geneva at which Hanoi promised to stop organizing boat departures of people it did not want.

Since then, Vietnam appears to be keeping its word, say Western diplomats, the United Nations and the refugees themselves.

But the smaller, steady flow of illegal escapees on small boats paid for with bribes and running a dangerous gauntlet of seaborne perils, seems to continue.

UN figures show these escapes have grown steadily this year: 2,960 arrivals in Southeast Asia in January, 2,910 in February, 4,762 in March, 6,722 in April and 4,200 in the first half of May.

In interviews here on the beaches of southern Thailand where nearly half the boat people land, the refugees said many small boats are caught by Vietnamese patrols.

The penalty is a prison term of from six months to three years, the refugees said.

Once they are on the high seas, on a 230-mile journey to southern Thailand or a longer trip to Malaysia, Singapore, Hong Kong or Indonesia, the sea itself is the enemy.

Marine assists elderly Cuban refugee to come ashore

Cuba vetoes proposal for orderly migration

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — The Cuban government Friday formally rejected a three-country request for negotiations on the refugee exodus, increasing chances the mass migration of Cubans to Key West will end once the last boat leaves Mariel harbor.

The United States, Britain and Costa Rica last weekend had proposed talks among the four countries in order to organize the exit of Cubans wishing to leave Cuba. The proposal called for refugees to be allowed to freely travel to countries willing to receive them.

But a Havana radio broadcast said the Cuban foreign ministry "rejected the proposal and returned it, stressing that in principle it had received it only for reasons of courtesy."

Meanwhile, a steady stream of refugee boats returning from the Cuban port of Mariel raised the 35-day total past 71,000 Friday, including the youngest refugee, Reina Mariela Miranda. She was born about eight hours before the Reef Queen, packed with 308 refugees, docked in Key West early Friday, said Dr. Armando Cruz. The baby's name means Queen Mariel.

Cruz said the mother, Amparo Carillo Miranda, 25, was in good condition and that her baby was "very healthy."

'Crazy' decision absolves airline

CHICAGO (AP) — A federal judge, saying his decision may seem "crazy," has absolved American Airlines from punitive damages in the worst disaster in U.S. aviation history.

While federal investigators pinned on the airline the major blame for the May 25, 1979, crash that killed 273 people aboard a DC-10, District Judge Hubert Will said American is protected from punitive damages by New York state law. American Airlines had its headquarters in New York at the time of the crash.

On the other hand, the DC-10 manufacturer is based in Missouri and can be assessed damages if it is found guilty of "willful misconduct," Will said, because Missouri does not provide such legal protection.

The judge said his decision seemed "crazy," but said he had no choice because of peculiarities in air disaster laws.

After investigating the crash, in which an engine tore loose from the jet's left wing, the National Transportation Safety Board said the primary cause of the crash was an American Airlines maintenance procedure that resulted in a crack in the pylon, which connects the engine to the wing.

The board also cited McDonnell Douglas for the design of the pylon and some other systems and it criticized the Federal Aviation Administration for alleged deficiencies in its inspection and reporting methods.

John Kennelly, a lawyer representing survivors of some of the victims, said an appeal of Will's decision is likely.

"This decision illustrates the absurdity of the present system of law," he said. "It's 14th century stagecoach law."

Punitive damages are awarded in addition to compensation for a loss, which was not at issue in Will's ruling.

Bloody battle in SW Africa

PRETORIA (AP) — South African security forces killed 81 black nationalist guerrillas and destroyed "huge amounts" of weapons and ammunition in northern Namibia, South African defence headquarters announced Friday night.

Five South African soldiers were killed in what was believed to be the bloodiest battle of the 14-year conflict for control of the territory, also known as South-West Africa.

The statement, issued here and in Windhoek, capital of the South African administration in the territory, said: "The soldiers died after they had walked into a huge enemy ambush on the border. A hectic firefight started and the security forces went over to the offensive immediately."

It added that the South Africans drove back the guerrillas, killing 81 in the ensuing fight.

Guerrillas of the South-West Africa People's Organization based in Angola have been battling South African troops in the territory since 1966, when the United Nations revoked South Africa's mandate to administer the arid, mineral-rich territory on the Atlantic Ocean.

When I was a kid my Grade 4 teacher Miss Roberts (the one with the interesting sweaters) told me that parliament is the crucible in which the raw ore of politics is melted down to produce the pure gold of the law.

Miss Roberts, now doubtless a doddering but well-developed octogenarian, is due for a crushing disappointment.

Can you bear to hear this, ma'am? Wouldn't you rather I just banged the chalk dust out of the blackboard brushes? Well if you insist . . .

I'm sorry indeed to tell you, Miss Roberts, that the parliamentary process as practiced in British Columbia is less of a crucible and more of a crock.

The legislature — marble, oak, stained glass and all — is the noble setting for an ignoble Punch-and-Judy show.

Where superior sentiments might be expected, we get instead the buffoon being hit over the head with a salami. Pie in the face as well as pie in the sky.

The victory of the clowns was never more apparent than in Thursday's debate in which the NDP and the Socreds re-enacted the battle over state-operated car insurance.

ICBC was our idea and you guys are just secret socialists and nyah, nyah, nyah, was Dave Barrett's cogent argument.

We made it work; you guys ran it into the red, was Bill Bennett's response — conveniently forgetting that the $181 million ICBC deficit in 1976 was a figment of Socred bookkeeping.

The argument lasted for most of the afternoon. Government and opposition vied for the laurels for inaccuracy, innuendo and insult.

Miss Roberts, had she been there, would have cracked a few knuckles with her pointer and set them all to write, 500 times: "I shall not waste the people's valuable time on self-serving stupidity."

Where are you when we need you, Miss Roberts?

Do you recall the aerial photographs of the area around Mount St. Helens after the eruption? All those trees lying there like the world's biggest game of pick-up-sticks, blown down by the blast.

One official was quoted as saying there was enough timber on the ground to build 200,000 homes.

If that's true, and if the timber can be rescued from the mud and flood, the B.C. forest industry might just as well shut up shop for a few years.

Our major wood export market is the United States. We have already been hard hit by the slump in that market, with 7,000 IWA members laid off and more due to get their notice any day now.

I'm no expert but from the photographs I would say a good deal of the blow-down timber around Mount St. Helens is salvageable.

Sawmill operators in Washington state will be under pressure to process that timber before it begins to deteriorate. The mills will be working at top capacity.

Logs that can't be handled now will either be stockpiled or exported to the Orient.

British Columbia's normal lumber markets will be up to their armpits in two-by-fours from Washington.

Forests Mininster Tom Waterland says he doesn't think the situation will affect B.C.

Sure Tom, and what do you hear from the tooth fairy?

Word has filtered out of the remote, rain coast community of Ocean Falls that most of the 1,100 residents are either drinking, drunk or sobering up for another bash at it.

Don't judge them too harshly. What would your reaction be if you were told you had no job, your home was valueless and your town was about to become a ghost town?

It doesn't matter whether the government will follow through on its commitment to eventually set up a small sawmill operation at Ocean Falls or whether — as the NDP claims — it's all a cruel hoax.

For the people there, what's happening now is what counts. And what's happening now is the end of a gentle way of life.

I was in Ocean Falls only once and I loved it. Sure it was raining. But the scenery was sensational and the feeling of serenity, friendliness and community spirit was inescapable.

I stayed one night and flew out the following morning, vowing some day to return. I didn't. Now it's too late.

Hey there you guys, have one for me.

Solution seen on fire safety

Victoria Ald. Bob Wright said today he's confident a dispute over fire safety at two city nursing homes can be resolved.

Wright, chairman of the city's fire prevention services committee, commented after he and three other aldermen toured the nursing homes Friday in connection with an appeal against strict fire safety improvements ordered for both premises.

They inspected Grant Place and Glenshiel Hotel.

"We have to weigh the burden of the cost factors along with the need to assure complete safety," Wright said.

One option is the possibility that the Glenshiel might be phased out floor by floor.

The committee will consider possible areas of compromise, Wright said, although it retains the right to either allow the full appeal or to reject the appeal completely.

"The issue comes down to a question of costs," he said.

Ironically, the city is enforcing provincial government requirements and has caught the province in its own web.

The problem facing Grant Place, Wright said, is that it can't unilaterally increase its rates to obtain funds to pay for the upgrading ordered by the fire department, because its rates are fixed by the government.

The fire department is enforcing the recently-amended national building code, including requirements for smoke and heat sensors, fire separation barriers, wide corridors and improved lighting and fire escapes.

They'll turn out Tuesday to show him they care

Les bids adieu but leaves a mark

By AB KENT

Les Isaacson — a man of many talents — is calling a distinguished career quits and ex-pupils, parents, teachers and school figures plan to see he goes out in style with an appreciation night Tuesday at Macaulay School.

Even as a 20-year-old private in the Warwickshire Regiment, Isaacson showed signs of being a gifted teacher.

Teaching, however, was the last thing he had on his mind as he and his mates fought a rearguard action across Belgium and northern France and finally escaped the Nazi invaders at Dunkirk 40 years ago.

But the army, sensing his real strength, made him a sergeant and instructor then posted him to Northern Ireland in preparation for the expected German landing on British soil.

A year later England still awaited the invader, and in hopes of finding more action Isaacson transferred to the Royal Air Force, becoming a pilot in October 1941.

He was made an instructorand ended up back in the classroom teaching flyers navigation, a role he was to keep for the rest of the war, and which led ultimately to his long and happy association with Greater Victoria schools.

At the end of the war, Isaacson took an emergency teaching course at Leavesden Green Training College near London and spent the next four years teaching civilians, playing soccer and becoming a Football Assocation referee.

By 1951, he and and his wife, May, came home to Victoria and he took up his first job in Oak Bay, teaching at Monterey elementary for three years.

He then became vice-principal at Quadra in 1954 and was named principal of Macaulay when it opened in 1955.

He stayed for 13½ years then in 1969, was named principal of George Jay elementary. In 1971, he started a four-year spell as principal of Cedar Hill Junior Secondary before returning to Macaulay in September, 1975.

At Macaulay he introduced the area's first elementary French program, responding to armed forces parents whose children had been taking similar classes in eastern Canada.

Since last January, Isaacson has been seconded to the school district's French program and comes into contact with teachers and classes at 14 different elementary schools a month, seeing about 1,200 children for 20-30 minutes per class.

Although his experience with French dates from his own school days and his military service in France, Isaacson says he is not bilingual.

"My success in teaching French is because I know the language and I know how to teach."

Many would agree.

But Isaacson will be remembered for his fairness and understanding, traits which have endeared him to ex-pupils, parents and teachers.

"I think the truth of it is I've met them at their level and done what I could to meet their wishes if they fit the alternatives. I haven't always pleased the parents," he said.

Isaacson has been respected too for his approach to discipline.

"I have used the strap, but never without first consulting the parents."

Isaacson is aware of great changes in the teaching profession, having helped bring much of it about as a 10-year member of the teachers' learning conditions committee, as a member of the B.C. Teachers' Federation executive from 1969-71 and as president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association from 1970-71.

He was also secretary-treasurer of the Principal's and Vice-principal's Association of GVTA.

He's been involved in refereeing in coast league soccer, served as presidency of the island Juvenile Soccer League for seven years and was a member of the senior soccer league disciplinary committee.

He also found time to hold the presidency of the Victoria Duplicate Bridge Club.

"Teaching is a heavier job today than 30 years ago," Isaacson said. "It's tougher now with more community involvement.

"If you're doing a job you have ups and downs. If you please everyone all the time you are not doing a job."

As a fitting tribute to Isaacson, his friends have decided to present a perpetual school trophy to be given to students for achievement in the elementary French program.

Gun battle suspects nabbed

Ganges RCMP have two 21-year-old men in custody in connection with a break-in and gun battle on tiny Jackscrew Island Thursday afternoon.

The men are to appear in court charged with breaking and entering.

Six officers and the dogmaster and tracking dog arrested the suspects on Kuper Island opposite Chemainus at 3:30 p.m. Friday.

The two surrendered without a struggle.

Police said one of the suspects has an injury to his leg which a doctor in Ganges said may have been caused by a bullet.

An unidentified man and woman, the sole occupants of Jackscrew Island, located north of Salt Spring between North Galiano and Kuper Islands, arrived home Thursday to find two men carting off their belongings.

Duncan man charged in wife's death

A Duncan businessman is free on $50,000 bail after he appeared in court in Hawaii Friday charged with the murder of his wife.

Police found her body April 26 in an apartment in Lahaina, a major tourist community on the island.

Large is a director of both the K and R food stores chain and Datatech Services Ltd. of Victoria.

Blind spearhead rights fight

By BRENDA DALGLISH

B.C.'s blind have launched a drive to win full rights for all handicapped people in the province.

At a conference this weekend at the University of Victoria, blind delegates are mapping strategy to have of B.C.'s disabled and handicapped people included in the province's human rights legislation.

About 30 delegates to the annual conference of the B.C. and Yukon division of the Canadian Council of the Blind will learn basic lessons in organization.

Del Graham, who heads the legislation committee from the local branch of the council, says handicapped people are just beginning to organize and she expects a long battle to win the rights and public awareness needed.

"Handicapped people are the only minority that aren't covered by human rights legislation in this province," Graham said.

"Right now in B.C., the blind can be denied jobs strictly on the grounds that they're blind — no consideration has to be made of their qualifications or abilities."

Graham said she went through the entire process of applying and being hired for a government job.

On the first day she showed up for work — before she was given any opportunity to show what she was capable of — she was told she couldn't do the job.

Graham said statistic show that one in seven Canadians is classified as handicapped.

"When enough of those people get fed up with the way things are and learn how to organize, the government will be forced to recognize their human rights," she predicted.

"Part of the conference will be aimed at getting blind people to understand what they can do to change things."

Graham said the government has been asked to conduct a public awareness campaign, similar to the alcohol abuse campaign, to inform people about handicapped people.

Increased public awareness and legislative changes must go hand in hand, she said.

Bus changes will be gradual

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Greater Victoria residents won't see many improvements in bus service until January, according to Dennis Grimmer, Urban Transit Authority director for the Capital Region.

By then, 29 new buses painted with the orange-striped UTA logo should be ready to beef up the transit system, Grimmer said.

The first major change noticed by most residents will be a tripling of service to the Western Communities and Saanich Peninsula.

"Obviously it's fair to say the suburban communities have been under-serviced," Grimmer commented.

And Victoria Mayor Bill Tindall said that until the new buses arrive, most changes will be promotional ones aimed at getting more people to use the system.

"On a day-to-day basis there will be very little that's visible to the general public," Tindall said.

Until last year, Greater Victoria transit was handled by B.C. Hydro.

It is now controlled in a three-way agreement between the Capital Region District, the Urban Transit Authority of B.C. and Metro Transit Operating Co. (formerly B.C. Hydro transit division).

The CRD is responsible for local planning policy and finances 25 per cent of the annual operating deficit.

The UTA picks up 75 per cent of the annual deficit, handles major financing, makes general policy decisions and supplies the buses.

The three bodies have a joint operating agreement that sets out the annual budget — $11.9 million this year — and yearly service program.

Grimmer said the UTA is now concentrating on a marketing strategy to improve public awareness.

Daily bus passes are part of that strategy and will be available starting next month. A program for monthly passes should be ready by September, he said.

New timetables, issued every four months, will be circulated Friday dressed up in the UTA colors.

TINDALL

. . . promotion push

Color co-ordinated bus signs will be erected during the next few months. Buses will be painted with the distinctive orange band along the side over a five-year period.

Evaluation has not been completed of an experimental program adding wheelchair lifts to four buses on the Beacon Hill route, said Grimmer.

But a custom transit service using vans to transport handicapped in the Capital Region is now being developed and should be ready by the fall, he said.

The vans, including the Lion's Easter Seal buses, will be painted with the orange UTA colors.

Grimmer said the UTA hopes to encourage commuter travel between Sidney and Victoria by improving bus service in January.

The present service is a tourist special that winds through Brentwood and Cordova Bay and takes an hour and 15 minutes.

The ride will be trimmed to a 50-minute express run by switching to the Pat Bay Highway at Saanichton. Buses will leave hourly and at half-hour intervals in rush hour.

More links and more frequent service will be established between communities like Langford and Colwood.

Bus service from the Western Communities to Victoria will also improve.

For example, the bus to Langford, now leaving Victoria at 1½-hour intervals between 7:30 a.m. and 6 p.m., will leave every 30 minutes between 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. and on the hour from then until midnight.

Juan de Fuca Recreation Centre will be the main transfer point where passengers can switch buses.

The recreation centre parking lot will also be used for a park-and-ride system now being planned between Colwood and Victoria.

Dr. Pickup: doctor, or alcoholic?

PICKUP
. . . just two a day

ALERT BAY (CP) — It is typical of the brusque, up-front Dr. Jack Pickup that he choses to talk about the volume of his alcohol intake over a rye and soda at the Legion bar.

The residents of this fishing town on an island off the northeast of Vancouver Island, are debating a referendum of their own on the question: Is Jack Pickup fit to practise here?

The consensus is that it is too much to expect the doctor, when off duty, to closet himself like a monk and stay stone cold sober, at the top of his form as a healer, 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

At the Legion, Pickup is buying.

"Sure, I drink, so do most people. I have been here (at the Legion) and been called down to the hospital with liquor on my breath.

"Was I drunk? Drunk is neither a legal or medical term. All I can tell you is that I've never been impaired."

What then of the several accounts at Dr. Gary Goldthorpe's recent federal inquiry into Indian health care about Pickup, staggering with liquor on his breath at the hospital?

"Dr. Pickup is an alcoholic in need of treatment," Goldthorpe said in his report.

Pickup replies that his accusers were either honestly mistaken or part of a smear campaign he traces to a small, radical group within the Nimpkish Indian band, the largest native group in the area.

"The radicals want me out so that they can take over health care up here even though they haven't got the competence to do it."

Pickup, 61, is a slender man with deep-set blue eyes that give him an intense, withdrawn look. He is introverted enough to refuse to pose for pictures.

As Legion president, he has the run of the place. He walks to the bar and comes back with two more beers and another rye.

"This, by the way, is my quota," he says. "I do not drink in the daytime and rarely drink before supper."

Until recently, it was his habit to go to the Bayside Hotel, a block away from the hospital, "for a couple before supper; but I can't do that any more because of all the hassle."

He says he is bitter about one-sided coverage of the radical group's campaign, about coverage of an inquest last year into the appendicitis death of an 11-year-old Nimkpish girl and Goldthorpe's finding that the girl's death and two other deaths at St. George's could be traced to "Dr. Pickup's errors in judgment or neglect."

"Dr. Goldthorpe never talked to me about any of the accusations against me."

There also is a hint of bitterness when asked if he's hanging on here so that his daughter, Roma, a third-year medical student, can take over the practice.

"I tried to talk her out of becoming a doctor," Pickup says. "There's no way I would want her here."

His only comment on what he earns is that his net income for 1979 was $60,000. On the basis of the $133,486 gross payments to H. J. Pickup and Associates by the B.C. Medical Services Commission for the year ended March, 1979, he's among the highest-paid general practitioners in B.C.

"I saw an ad for a doctor here and came west," said Pickup, a native of Cardston, Alta., and a graduate of Queen's University in Ontario.

The same year he got a pilot's licence and bought a Waco, a biplane with floats, to become the area's flying bush doctor. Before he quit flying in 1970, he had logged 1,000 hours, most of it on flights to remote logging camps and Indian settlements. His only mishap was to hit a log while landing on Nimpkish lake.

He says he is busier as a doctor than he has ever been, averaging 30 patients a day at his afternoon clinics.

Next door to Pickup's clinic, there is the office of Dr. Elaine Ling, assigned to Alert Bay by the federal health department as one of a procession of backup doctors working here during the past two years. Dr. Ling is treating about five patients a day.

Diane Pagani, a licensed practical nurse in Pickup's office, says there has been no decline in his practice even though the "group at the other end of town (the Nimpkish band radicals) have been making threats against patients who come to see him."

"He's still my doctor."

"I've got five kids and Dr. Pickup delivered every one of them," says Mrs. Delores Wilson. "If I thought he was an alcoholic, he wouldn't be my doctor."

Jim Speck, long-time resident and the Legion bartender for last two years, credits Pickup for getting him off the bottle.

"I've been off the booze for 4½ years, thanks to him. I was up to 298 pounds but under his care, I'm holding it at 198."

Love that Hydro, Bennett pleads

SURREY (CP) — People should start thinking positively about B.C. Hydro, Premier Bill Bennett said Friday.

Speaking at the official opening of Hydro's new $20 million research and development centre, Bennett said it is easy to criticize Hydro.

"But I'd like to hear the screams and cries the day the light switch doesn't work," the premier said. Precisely this point, Bennett's microphone went dead, and his speech was delayed while the sound system was fixed.

Bennett said the $20 million will be "money well spent" because there is a potential to save $30 for everh dollar spent on research.

Hydro chairman Robert Bonner said the centre will provide the Crown corporation with the means to solve problems that previously couldn't be dealt with.

"We seek to solve everyday working problems," he said. "We can now test equipment that we previously had to send overseas."

Hydro railway can't say no

VANCOUVER (CP) — B.C. Hydro's railway cannot legally refuse to carry dangerous shipments as long as they are properly packaged, Hydro chairman Bob Bonner says in a letter to city council.

People who live near the Arbutus corridor used by the railway have been worried about the hazards posed by the shipments of dangerous commodities, and council recently asked Hydro to report on the number and types of shipments and whether alternative methos of moving the commodities are available.
